A WEEKLY NEWS LETTER.

RIGHT IN THE MARROW.

O the City of Bradford, Yorkshire, England, is conceded the birthplace of the Independent Labor Party of the British Isles, a party which is today one of the factors to be reckoned with in the old land legislative chamber. Around the thirty year mark of existence, its ramifications extend from representation in cabinet positions to the humblest spheres of public service. The established position of this workers' party is too well known with its lease of upbuilding of present history for its activities to require recital. It is directly with the city which initiated the party, taking root from trade unionism, in this instance we are concerned.

Brought into being through a strike in which some 15,000 workers were involved, the situation of numerical strength battling against financial might ineffectively, was the lesson driven home. The eyes of the workers and leaders were opened to seek effective organization and direct representation, with the result that it has reached the proportions of today. Bradford City led, other centres followed, other countries fol-

It would seem quite in the nature of events that a birthright such as this should mean more than being in the procession, the bell cow position being correct, and it so happens that in the friendly rivalry in the pressing forward advocating advanced working-class legislation, Bradford City has held and continues to hold a premier position, direct labor representation in all branches of public service being such that the workers' practical suggestions are made effective through enactment.

A Labor Lord Mayor, member of the House of Commons, representatives on all public bodies is part and parcel of Bradford City life, no longer in the nature of novelty, but firmly entrenched and recognized as a necessity to the city's welfare. What may be considered in other centres as movement of daring is just a matter-of-fact happening, begot of that confidence of three decades of growth of the movement of the movement of the which it was responsible for which it was responsible.

In matters of education this city is considered to lead the way. Feeding of the school children before the great war was carried out which made Bradford the envy of other centres, this being done through the medium of a central cookhouse, which was notified from the various schools directly after each morning's our weekly british letter. assembly how many meals were required. Open air, out in the country, school children whose physique or condition called for such attention, were taken to the rustic school to become acquainted with the three R's, the transportation being by means of the municipally owned tram cars to the health and learning rendezvous. Every move was progress, with the interest of the child a first consideration.

the interest of the child a first consideration.

With such a condition existing one may now be prepared for any new or seemingly novel venture, and it certainly seems that such is at hand with the latest proposal cited by the Monitor, as follows: "A new secondary school is required at a cost of $500,000, and they contend that it would be cheaper to buy a ship and have a floating school. The boat is not to be stationary, but to take the scholars, say about 200 of them, a trip for six or twelve months, landing them at foreign countries where they could learn the language and improve international relations. There is a suggestion from the chairman of the committee that the ship should carry, besides scholars, goods from Bradford that could be exchanged for goods from the foreign ports."

By examples cited, thus is this busy manufacturing centre of the north of England utilizing the heritage given to it as the birthplace of the workers' party, and from its progressive movements of public welfare others may take advantage of the initiative displayed.

Bred in the bone is apparently correctly applied to the city that cradled the organized workers' party of Greater Britain.

Replying to a question intended to prevent the repatriation of Dominion soldiers until the authorities were satisfied as to their responsibilities, and that their wives and families had been properly provided for. Winston Churchill, Secretary of State for War, said in the House of Commons, last week, that arrangements were in the hands of the Dominions. Dependents were as all minions. Dependents were not al-lowed to defer their passage except under special conditions, and he had no power to take further action.

WINNIPEG'S RECENT VOTE EXPLAINED BY "P. R." EXPERT.

The reason that Labor received a little less than its apparent share of representation in the recent Winnings elections in the light of the big vote cast for Dixon, was due to the fact that a very large proportion of second and third choices on Dixon's ballots were for Liberal or Charactaritie candidates, said Ronald Hooper, honorary secretary of the Proportional Representation Society of Canada, at a public meeting at Regina recently.
