There is a practical business reason why Great Britain is no longer building "cao-had already begun. Apparently this fact has not penetrated Washington in-telligence, and, as might be expected. Secretary Daniels is the last person to see the fundamental change in naval armament. Capital ships on the plan he lays down would be worse than worthless. This is the plain business reason why his three billion dollar nevy Great Britain learned this lesson from the battle of Jutland, and from subse-quent naval activities. Every effort to bring battleships and cruisers of enor-mous gun power and displacement, into contact with the enemy was foiled by submarine menace, just as Germany's effort to surprise the British field was prevented by wireless warning. Since the battle of Jutland, Great Britain has completed only one capital ship, the battle of Jutland, Great Britain has completed only one capital ship, the But Great Britain has scrapped all her sizer ships already commenced, to save the cos. of completion. Taken from the Manhattan Mercury, June 8: "Last night at the Gillett's Hotel Parlors a tone test recital was given before a number of representative people of Manhattan, in which the following machines were used. Starr Phonograph and machine.

Mr. Chas. Hughes, ex-officio county attorney, and J. T. Cresly, a prominent citizen of Manhattan, were appointed as referees or sponsors for the machines. The test was given in a rather unique manner, but in a way that could leave no doubt as to the machine preferred.

The three machines were placed back of portieres, so that the ones who wished to enter into the voting contest could not see the machines, in fact only the judges who sat behind the portieres could see the machines. The machines were played in rotation from first to last, using the same record on each machine until six records of standard make were played. Cards marked one, two, three, were issued to those who wished to vote on the machine they liked best. The result was the Starr Phonograph received 68 votes, the received 16 votes, and the machine received 9 votes."

Parties desiring the names of the other two standard machines, call or write and we will furnish same.

ON FLANDERS FIELDS. [Henry Polk Lowenstein.] On Flanders fields the sun beam bright. The silver moon looks down at night.

And clustered stars from heaven shine Upon the long-drawn battle line, From darkness to eternal Light!

The little mounds and crosses white From lowly vale to mountain height, Have marked this place a holy shrine, On Flanders Fields!

Though pulseless here they won the fight. In that great battle for the right. And now their souls in peace recline And rest in that Great Heart-of. Mine. While curtain falls without affright. On Finders Fields!
