

"THIS TOO WILL PASS"

Without indulging in that most dangerous pastime, aptly dubbed, "wishful thinging", many of us have undoubtedly been stirred by recent events to contemplate the possibilities of the post war years. That we have every right to do so at this time is borne out by the reports of the Quebec Conference, where we are assured, this subject was soundly discussed.

Many of us realize that the ultimate cessation of hostilities will usher in a new period of difficulties, rather than merely ending the present one. Some of us believe that that period will call for a greater expenditure of national and individual effort in order to achieve those aims for which we now think it worthwhile to sacrifice billions of dollars and millions of lives.

The time to plan for the years ahead is now. If, when planning the assault on the fortress of Europe the leaders of Democracy considered it necessary to discuss post war plans, surely it is time for each of us to have some idea of what we want to do "after the war". What solution our leaders reached can only conjecture, what we can be sure of is that those plans are doomed to failure unless the Service personnel do something about their own plans now.

If the country feels obliged to help you to pick up the threads of your life where you dropped them in order to serve the country, then the least you can do is be ready to present your case. So start now to think it over.
