The High School

By HOWARD L. RANN

THE high school is a large brick building where young men and women are taught everything except spelling and the location of the Panama canal. It is a costly edifice, and is usually built with the aid of a double-barreled tax which causes the perspiration to stand out on the brow of the body politic.

High schools are established for the purpose of introducing ambitious students to a collection of languages which are never used in ordinary conversation. By the time a student is able to talk fluently on his fingers in the original Greek, Hebrew and Sanskrit, he is fitted to do everything except keep books in his father's store or adjust a corn plaster so that it won't skip over nine hills at one leap.

The most effective hold which the high school has now is higher mathematics, which is drilled into the sweet girl graduate as thoroughly as possible. This is an excellent thing, for when the girl graduate gets married she will have fully as much use for geometry and trigonometry as a blind man has for a reading glass.

There are thousands of high school graduates who can parse a right angle triangle with their eyes shut, but who don't know whether Aaron Burr was the second husband of Pocahontas or a trademark for a new brand of sleeveless underwear.

The high school is presided over by fifteen or twenty teachers, who take the plastic mind of youth and fill it full of decimal fractions, German vowels, Shakespearean sonnets and other gray matter, which come in very handy when the graduate begins to learn the grocery business. The high school also teaches a style of angular penmanship which the address has to stand on his head to read.

High schools are a great blessing, but they would be more popular if they spent less time on botany and biology and more on single entry bookkeeping.
