ment is pledged to prohibition. The people have asked prohibition by an immense majority. Thousands who marked their ballots for prohibition did so for the noblest of reasons, the welfare of their fellowmen, what they do not personally need. A vast majority of the people, in fact nearly all not especially interested in the liquor traffic, are willing to give prohibition a fair trial. It is the easiest thing imaginable to spoil all this and send the cause back fifty years. Just threaten to turn men out of the church of God if they do not part about the strength of communion wine, and all the advantage gained during the last few months may be worse than lost. versible. The membership of the Sea.

From the ancient annual ceremony of throwing a ring into the sea by the doge. In the year 1177 it is said that the pope of Rome presented to the doge of Venice a ring, saying: "Take this as a pledge of authority over the sea, and marry herevery year, you and your successors forever, in order that all may know she is under your jurisdiction and that I have placed her in your dominion, as a wife under the dominion of her husband." Hence arose the strange custom of "wedding the Adriatic." When the yearly wed ding day came around. Venice kept the anniversary in the most feetive robes. All her officers and wealthy citizens might be seen sitting in their gondolas, each boat and its occupant striving to outfo all others in wealth of adornment. The gondolas formed in procession, the doge leading, and at a certain part of the procession a well-known and oft-repeated formula was recited, claiming for Venice authority over the sea, the emblematic ring was then dropped into the depths and the marriage was considered complete. The Venice of the doges is a thing of the past, and the custom has long been obsolete.

The Lucky Thirteen.

The present Duchess of Sutherland, according to a story which is current in Scotland, owes her position to the superstition concerning the unluckiness of thirteen. One day at the house of the late Lord Rosslyn it was discovered that there were thirteen persons at the dinner table. To add to the number Lady Millicent, a daughter of the house who had not yet come out, was sent for to join the party, and the young Marquis of Stafford was so charmed with her that he almost immediately afterward proposed and was accepted.

of all the reports they have turned into the office, and it is from these records that the mass of affidavits now at Pittsburg has been made up.

There is no doubt that John McLuckie and the five mill-workers associated with him have accumulated this information through mixed motives. They say they are patriotic enough to believe it their duty to let the Government and the public know that much of the armor on the ships built to defend the United States is worthless. When the affidavits are made public and the names of the mill-workers are known they will be blacklisted, of course, and it will be difficult for them to find employment. They believe that their information is of such value to the nation that it should be and will be properly paid for.

How Armor-Plate is Made.

The manufacture of armor plate is a very complicated process. It requires very heavy and very expensive machinery, and each manufacturer has some secrets. In the first place, a mass of steel, with a proportion of nickel, when nickeled steel is desired, is melted in a furnace and tapped from this furnace with a ladie and poured into a large mould. This makes the ingot, sometimes weighing as much as fifty tons. Blow holes are most frequent at the top of the ingot, and are caused by the escaping gasses as the metal is cooling. A certain percentage of the ingot is cut from the upper part, and the rest is reheated and then placed in the enormous rolls and rolled down to the required thickness for the plate. Then it is taken from the amone mill to the machine shop or press shop, and the necessary 'crops'

"There!" said the young wife proudly, as she deposited the hot plate carefully on the table. "That's the first mince pie that I ever made without any help, all slone myself."

"So it is!" exclaimed her husband enthusiastically, looking it over, critically meanwhile. "And as long as it is the very first, my dear, don't you think that, instead of cutting it, it would be nice to keep it for a souvenir? How would it do to have it framed?"—Somerville Journal.
