The Snakes' Paradise.

The Borongo Islands lie about halfway between Calcutta and Rangoon. When the snakes die they go to the Borongos. That is their paradise; there they hold high carnival. I spen three years among them, and know of these things. From the giant python down to the deadly karait they are all there, all the ophidians. Even the sale water snakes, that are all poisonous they, too, are there. Two Europeans had preceded me on the Borongos, so there was considerable natural history on tap when I arrived, and we rapidly acquired more. One can't live as snakes without studying them; they

low. A big cat was my usual com-panion. His method of introducing himself to my notice was generally abrupt. He would lie in wait, and, as came along, spring out upon me, alight-ing against one of my legs. At other times he would lie on his back in the path and claw at my feet as I passed One evening, just after turning into the path from the bungalow, I felt something soft and yielding against my foot. Thinking it was "Billy," I gave the mass a gentle push. As I shifted the something I saw a twisting gleam of white, not at all like the soft gray of Billy's fur. Of course I knew what that meant. Jumping back I brought my walking-stick down on the twisting thing, and yelled for a light. The servants came running from the cookhouse with a lantern, and I saw that I had laid out a most villainous dabola. One touch from the catlike fangs on my cotton-hosed instep, and within an hour I would have been dead.

One of our party had occasion to visit a Mr. Savage, a half-caste land-owner on the other side of the island. He went in a boat, and while the cool-ies were bringing up his true went up to the bungalow. He was sitting in a big chair on the veranda, talking to Savage, when he felt something drop from the leaf roof on to his shoulder Leisurely he started to rise to see what had fallen, when the other man cried out: "For God's sake don't move keep perfectly still!" Dunlop knew what that meant. Stealthily the old man took a Burmese dah (sword) from the wall, and, catlike, crept toward the white man with the thing on his shoul der. Within striking distance he paused, and raised the dah high in the paused, and raised the dah high in the nir to cut the thing in two with one swift downward stroke. Then his nerve, rattled and tugged at for sixty years until it was weak, failed him, and the sword clattered from his numbed fingers to the floor. "My God! I can't do it," he whined in a broken voice, and reeled back against the wall, where he stood staring with weak eyes at the sahib and his burden.

Dunlon neither moved nor spoke; his Duniop neither moved nor spoke; his only safety lay in keeping perfectly still-motionless. It might be minutes, or a thousand years; they would have to wait till the boatmen came. What would happen then he could not say. He could feel the clinging, pulling thing on his right shoulder. There was an undulating pressure that told him the head of the snake was swaying back and forth just above his neck. Then the song of the Madrassi boatnen as they came swinging along with his luggage broke upon his ear. Those gin-thickened voices, carolling the coarse refrain to the time of the measured trot, were angel voices. What would the muddle-brained coolies do, ne wondered. If Emir Ally, his trusted servant, saw the thing, it might be well: he had nerve and judgment ever close to that of a sahib. Emir Ally was in the lead. When he came to the steps Savage jerked out an expression that called his attention to the tableau Gathering his loongy tight about his loins, he slipped along the veranda like a shadow, grasped the fallen dah, and, poising his black lithe body for a swift, strong stroke, brought the sword through the air with a swishing cut laid a full-grown cobra in two neat pieces almost at the feet of the nan who had waited .- W. Stories of the Bar.

An able Southern lawyer, still livng, has a good story about his exmination by Reverdy Johnson, one of the greatest lawyers of the last entury, says the Philadelphia "Times." Mr. Johnson knew the young man, but, apparently, he did not allow his faniliarity to influence the case. asked him one or two questions as easy as the alphabet or the multiplication table, and then very severely demanded:

"Young man, can you mix a good brandy julep?"
"I think I can, sir," was the reply. "There," pointing to the sideboard,

"are the ingredients, sir. Now, let me see what you can do."
The candidate approached and used his finest touch and sense of selection in compounding the tonic. Then, topping it off artistically with a fresh mint, he presented it to his examiner. Mr. Johnson gave the case his best care and patience, and finally, when the bottom of the generous glass had been reached, he looked at the young man admiringly and announced that he had passed. Another story is told of a judicial district in Florida where, before the era of railroads and owing to the numerous creeks and rivers, there had to be frequent fording of streams in order to make good time between the country towns. The candidate pre-sented himself before the judge, who, after looking at the young man a few moments and taking in his measure, asked:

"Can you ride?"
"Yes, sir." "Do you own a horse?"

"Yes, sir."
"Can he swim?" Whereupon the judge bowed gravely nd remarked: "I am very glad, sir, to welcome you to the practice of law in my district." Angry Wife-What do you mean by coming home at this time of night? Husband-Every other place was shut,

"Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on thy charge to stop his wounds lest he do bleed to death." People can bleed to death. The loss of blood weakens the body. It must follow that gain of blood gives the body strength. The strengthening effect of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is in large part due to its action on the blood making glands and the increased supmaking glands and the increased sup-ply of pure, rich blood it produces. ICHARD WATSON GILDER IS ICHARD WATSON GILDER is an enthusiastic lover of the delightful Derkshire region of Western Massachusetts, says the Philadelphia "Post," and has a summer home there. He loves to climb the hills, to drive about the charming roads, to fish in the waters.

With a close friend, a well-known New York artist, he set out one day for an all-day drive. Both were entranced by the scenery and delighted by the they rounded a bend, was a delightful old home. Its pillared doorway, its fan-shaped window, its gambrel roof, its picturesque gables, its quaint old-fashioned air, were very charming, and upon it was a sign, "For rent."

The two men left the buggy and stepped toward the house. It was empty, but through the narrow slitted windows at either side of the door the author and artist glanced. They saw a big grandfather's clock at the turn of "A dream of beauty," said the art-How strange it seemed. What mystery, what romance, perhaps even what tragedy, lay beyond it all! Here in this ancient house were all the ancient furnishings untouched, in spite of the keen search for such things by the myriad lovers of old-fashioned furni-ture and the dealers whose agents go everywhere. Undoubtedly there must be some strange and striking story to explain it all.

The sum, accordingly which the Chancellor of the Excheque of the day fixed in his own mind as discovered that the total expenditure

Now, when Victoria was crowned, : out of place, and the consequence was that the whole cost was brought well within the estimate. The cost of arranging the Abbey ran into £30,000. The Lord Chamberlain's Department absorbed £14,000, the Master of the Horse and the Mistress of the Robes got £13,000 between them, the Earl Marshal and the heralds put in a bill for £1,800, the cost of the commemorative medals was £5,000, and £5,500 was spent on fireworks, illuminations and free theaters. The lot came to £69,421.

Now, one reason why the coronation of George IV. cost so much more, and, indeed, surpassed the expenditure upon any event of the kind before or since, was because there was a banquet pro vided for about two thousand hungry and thirsty souls who had eaten nothing all day because of their duties in the Abbey. It was a royal feed. The turtle alone filled eighty tureens, the turbot lay upon the same number of dishes, and there were eighty dishes also of salmon and trout. The butcher's and game bills came to a respectable total, as the following toothsome details will show: Beef, 7,442 pounds; veal, 7,033 pounds; mutton, 20,474 pounds; lamb, 20 quarters, 20 legs and 5 saddles; 55 quarters of grass lamb; sweetbreads, 160; cow heels, 389; calves' feet, 400; geese, 170; capons, 720; chickens, 1,610; bacon, 1,730 pounds; butter, 912 pounds; and 8,400 eggs. Nor was the flushing of the necks of the two thousand forgotten, as witness the wine bill: 100 dozen champagne, 200 dozen claret, 50 dozen each hock, Moselle and Madeira; 350 dozen sherry and port, 20 dozen Burgundy and 100 gallons iced punch.

denly the artist and Mr. Gilder uttered an involuntary cry of pleasure, for there right in front of them, as they rounded a bend, was a delightful
