

A LONDON GIN PALACE.

Strange that man, the highest and noblest of beings, should so far forget himself as to sink to a level with the vilest of brutes...

In no country in the world does intemperance in the use of intoxicating drinks appear to a more revolting form than in England and America...

We know of nothing which so fearfully indicates the criminal indifference of those who make and execute laws...

It is full of reptiles—the air is foul with the fumes of abominable liquors, and is a poison of itself...
