The Cross in New Granada.

Supporting Cardinal Lavergne in his crusade, and doing all that his power lies to save the children of Africa, we see Cardinal Manning, of England. Tender as is the love of his great heart for the oppressed of every clime, it would be strange if he could bear unmoved the terrible story of the poor negro's wrongs. But it would indeed be stranger far if he could be cold and indifferent in the presence of the woe of another land, the drink-slaves of his native land, and the slaves of the earth there has been Westminster another Cardinal crusader, the leader of a mighty movement for the liberation of England's myriad slaves of drink, and for the overthrow of their oppressors.

In all the wide world no one, perhaps, is better than the Cardinal Manning the power of the terrible demon of drunkenness, none better than he can attempt to number the slaves of the drink monster, or to tell the misery of their bondage. In the presence of evil great and terrible, and seemingly without remedy, Cardinal Manning could not look idly on. Dismayed by no difficulties, deterred by no obstacles, he has for many years been struggling for the liberation of a people. To redeem the slaves of their own weakness, the slaves of appetite, the slaves of drink and the slaves of the bottle, he has endeavored to free the world from the burning and enlivening slaves of the drink monster; with others who have united with him in a noble army battling in a noble cause.

Great is the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster in the mire that adorns his venerable brow, in his gallant that hangs upon his temples, in the crimson robe that makes him prince of the church; but greater far is he as father of the poor, the friend of the lowly, the liberator of the drink-enslaved, the champion of the oppressed. Upon the head of this sainted priest of the Most High the snows of eighty winters have fallen, but his heart has not grown old nor his courage lessened. With a firm grasp he holds the crusader's banner, and in clear, trumpet tones bids the best and most devoted of England to rally round him. To aid to think that so many years have gone by since his glory in the Church and of humanity must pass away. But in the hour when his Lord shall bid him lay down his arms and prepare for rest eternal, around the dying cross there will come a guardian angel, who, perceiving of joy and victory, memories of the thousands won, by prayer and example, by work and prayer, by his led out of the bondage of the demon of intemperance into the liberty of the redeemed of Christ. In his dying agonies, his people's prayers and tears will plead for him before the throne of God.

With the broad charity of the burning seal which the spirit of self-sacrifice ever brings with it, Cardinal Manning and his League of Friends do not content with struggling for the redemption of drink-slaves in England only, look with longing eyes and stretch out helping hands to Ireland, to the United States, to France, to Germany, to those whose courage and resolution all the cruel despotism of England could never subdue, yielding themselves body and soul to the chains of the drink monster. For the sake of the Father, Matthew lived, labored and died, too many of the people of his love have forgotten his sublime teachings.

Whitely many are battling and fighting a work to strike from the lines of Ireland the chains forged by England, few, very few, alas! are they—and few the plaudits which they receive—and few the laurels which they wear.

It is in diseases of this origin that is achieved, and in achieving, such marvelous results. Rev. R. T. Brine, Pugh, N. S., says: "Being fully convinced that suffering from exhaustion, brain weakness or rheumatic attacks will gain speedy relief from the use of Puttner's Emulsion, I feel it a duty to make known to such the remediable effect upon my system." Dr. H. J. Forsyth, St. Peter's, G. B., says: "Judging from the results obtained from Puttner's Emulsion in the course of my practice, I cordially recommend it to possess all the virtues ascribed to it as a medicine."
