AUTHOR OF "WINDOW IN THRUMS," "WHEN A MAN'S SINGLE," "MY LADY NICOTINE," ETC.

Long before I had any thought of writ-ng this story, I had told it so often to my title maid, "("This is what he always called ne, but I am not so very little.—M; that he now knows some of it better than I. If you saw me looking up from my paper to ask her, "What was it that Birse said to Jean about the minister's flowers?" or, "Where was Hendry Muun hidden on the night of the riots?" and heard her confident auswers, you would conclude that she had been in the thick of these events instead of born some years after them. I mention this now because I have reached a point where her memory contradicts mine. She maintains that Rob Dow was told of the meeting in the wood by the two boys whom it disturbed, while my own impression is that he witnessed it. If she is right Rob must have succeeded in frightening the boys into telling no other person, for certainly the scandal did not spread in Thrums. After a'll, however, it is only important to know that Rob did learn of the meeting. Its first effect was to send him sullenly to the drink.

Many a time since these events I have me looking up from my paper to "What was it that Birse said to

Many a time since these events I have Many a time since these events I have petured what might have been their upset had Dow confided their discovery to me. Had I suspected how Rob was grown adour again, Gavin's future might have ken very different. I was meeting Rob new and again in the glem, asking with an affected carelessness he did not bottom for tows of the little minister, but what he told me was only the gossip of the town, and wight I should have known, that Trumemightnever know it, he kept to himself. I suppose he feared to speak to Garia, who made several efforts to reclaim him, but without avail.

Yet Rob's heart opened for a moment to me man, or rather was forced open by him. I few days after the meeting at the well Rob was bringing the smell of whisky with im down Banker's Close when he ran against a famous ataff, with which the detor pinned him to the wall.

"At," said the outspoken doctor, looking contemptuously into Rob's bleary eyes, "so this is what your conversion amounts to? Fagh! Rob Dow, if you were half a man the very thought of what Mr. Dishart has dese for you would make you run past the public houses."

public houses,"

"It's the thocht o' him that sends me ranning to them," growled Rob knocking down the staff. "Let me alanc.

"What do you mean by that?" demanded McQueen, hooking him this time.

McQueen, hooking him this time.
"Speir at himsel'; speir at the woman."
"What woman?"
"Take your staff out o' my neek."
"Not till you tell me why you of all peple are speaking against the minister."
Torn by a desire for a confidant and syally to Gavin, Rob was already in a

"Say again," he burst forth, "that I was "Say again the minister and I'll practice on you what I'm awid to do to her." "Who is she?"

"Who is she?"
"Wha's wha?"
"The woman whom the minister—"
"I said nothing about a woman," said foor Rob, alarmed for Gavin. "Doctor, im ready to swear afore a baille that I swer saw them thegither at the Kaims."
"The Kaims!" exclaimed the doctor, middenly enlightened. "Pooh! you only nean the Egyptian. Rob make your mind easy about this. I know why he met her there."

"Do you ken that she has bewitched him; do you ken I saw him trying to put his arms round her; do you ken they have a trysting-place in Caddam wood?"
This came from Rob in a rush, and he would fain have called it all back.
"I'm drunk, doctor, roaring drunk," he said hastily, "and it wasna the minister I saw ava; it was another man."
Nothing more could the doctor draw from Rob, but he had heard sufficient to smoke some pipes on. Like many who pride themselves on being recluses, Mequeen loved the gossip that came to him uninvited; indead, he opened his mouth to it as greedily as any man in Thrums. He respected Gavin, however, too much to find this new dish palatable, and so his researches to discover whether other Auld Lichts shared Rob's fears were conducted with caution. "Is there no word of your minister's getting a wife yet?" he asked several, but only got for answer, "There's word o' a Glasgow leddy's sending him baskets o' flowers," or "He has his e'en open, but he's taking his time; ay, he's looking for the blade o' corn in the stack o' chaff."

This convinced McQueen that the contract of the state of the st

"You are a hopeless old bachelor, I see," said Gavin, unaware that the doctor was probing him. He was surprised next moment to find McQueen in the cestasies of one who has won a rubber.

"Now, then," cried the jubilant doctor, "as you have confessed so much, tell me all about her. Name and address, please."

"It won't do, Mr. Dishart, for even your face betrays you. No, no, I am an old bird, but I have not forgotten the ways of the fledglings. "Hopeless bachelor, sir, is a sweetmeat in every young man's mouth until of a sudden he finds it sour, and that means the banns. When is it to be?

"We must find the lady first," said the minister uncomfortably.

"You tell me, in spite of that face, that you have not fixed on her?"

"The difficulty, I suppose, would be to persuade her to fix on me."

"Not a bit of it. But you admit there is someone?"

"Who would have me?"

"Who would have me?"

"You are wriggling out of it. Is it the banker's daughter?"
"No," Gavin cried.

"No." Gavin cricd.
"I hear you have walked up the backwynd with her three times this week. The town is in a ferment about it."
"She is a great deal in the back-wynd."
"Fiddle-de-dee! I am oftener in the back-wynd than you, and I never meet her there."

"That is curious."
"That is curious."
"No, it isn't, but never mind. Perhaps you have fallen to Miss Pennycuick's piano? Did you hear it going as we passed

"Not she; but you are supposed to be musical, and so when she sees you from her window she begins to thump. If I am in the School-wynd and hear the piano going, I know you will turn the corner immediately. However, I am glad to hear it is not Miss Pennyouick. Then it is the factor at the Spittal's sister? Well done, sir. You should arrange to have 'ne wedding at the same time as the old earl's, which omes off in summer, I believe.

"One foolish marriage is enough in a day, doctor."

"Eh? You call him a fool for meaning to marry a young wife? Well, no doubt he is, but he would have been a bigger fool to marry an old one. However, it is not Lord Rintoul we are discussing, but Gavin Dishart. I suppose you know that the factor's lassie is an heiress?"

"And, therefore, would scorn me."

"Try her," said the doctor dryly. "Her father and mother, as I know, married on a ten-pound note. But if I am wrong again I must adopt the popular view in Thrums. It is a Glasgow lady after all? Man, you needn't look indignant at hearing that the people are discussing your intended. You can no more avoid it than a doctor's orders could keep Lang Tammas out of church. They have discovered that she sends you flowers twice every week."

"They nager reach me." answered Ga-

"Some," persisted the relentless doctor,
"even speak of your having been seen together; but of course if she is a Glasgow lady that is a mistake."

"Where did they see us?" asked Gavin,
with a sudden trouble in his throat.

"You are shaking," said the doctor keenly. "like a medical student at his first operation. But as for the story that you and the lady have been seen together, I can guess how it arose. Do you remember that gypsy girl?"

The doctor had begun by addressing the fire, but he suddenly wheeled round and fired his question in the minister's face.
Gavin, however, did not even blink.

For the pains and aches of suffering humanity there is one great remedy, of which it is said, as in the following, that it cures every time. This convinced McQueen that the compregation knew nothing of the Egyptian, but it did not satisfy him, and he made an opportunity of inviting Davin into the surgery. It was to the doctor, the cosiest nook in his house, but to me and many others a room that smelled of hearses. "But I don't think you ever supplied me with a reason," "I daressy not. I am too experienced adoctor to cheapen my prescriptions in that way. However, here is one good reason. I have noticed, sir, that at your age a man is either a slave to a pipe or to a woman. Do you want me to lend you a pipe now?" "Then I am to understand," asked Gavin slyly, "that your locket came into your possession in your pre-smoking days, and that you merely wear it from habit?" "Tuts," answered the doctor, buttoning his coat, "It told you there was nothing in the locket. If there is I have forgotten what itis." "You are a hopeless old bachelor, I see," said Gavin, unaware that the doctor was probing him. He was surprised north at you want to the first of the most of them are false and misleading.
