- The Face -Behind the Mask

A Romance.

Thus abjured, and seeing there was no help for it, Sir Norman, in a dazed and bewildered state, complied; and Ormiston promptly and briskly relaxed into business.

You see, my dear fellow, to begin at the beginning, after you left, as I get back to town, the sooner you will stood at ease at La Masque's door, see her: so don't loiter." awaiting that lady's return, and was presently rewarded by seeing her come up with an old woman called Prud-Do you recollect the woman who rushed screaming out of the house of the dead bride?"

"Well, that was Prudence. She and La Masque were talking so earnestly they did not perceive me, and I—well, the fact is, Kingsley, I stayed and listened. Not a very handsome thing, perhaps, but I couldn't resist it. They were talking of some one thou called were talking of some one they called Leoline, and I, in a moment, knew that it was your flame, and that neither of them knew any more of her whereabout than we did.'

"And yet La Masque told me to come here in search of her," interrupted Sir Very true! That was odd-wasn't it? This Prudence, it appears, was Le-oline's nurse, and La Masque, too. seemed to have a centain authority over her; and between them, I learned she was to have been married this very night, and died-or, at least, Prudence thought so-an hour or two before the time."

Then she was not married?" cried Sir Norman, in an ecstasy of delight.
"Not a bit of it; and what is more, didn't want to be; and judging from the remarks of Prudence, I should say, of the two, rather preferred the "Ah, but I do, though! Prudence owned it with the most charming candor in the world." "Did you hear the name of the person she was to have married?" asked Sir Norman, with kindling eyes. "I think not; they called him the count, if my memory serves me, and Prudence intimated that he knew nothing of the melancholy fate of Mistress Leoline. Most likely it was the per-son in the cloak and slouched hat we egiw talking to the watchman."

Sir Norman said nothing, but he thought a good deal, and the burden of his thoughts was an ardent and heartfelt wish that the Court L'Estrange was once more units the swords of the three robbers, a d wafting for him to ride to the rescue—

"La Masque urged Prudence to go back," continued Ormiston; "but Prucance respectfully declined, and wen't her way bemoaning the fate of her darling. When she was gone, I stepped up to Madame Masque, and that lady's first words of greeting were an earnest hope that I had been edified and improved by what I had over-

"See me? I believe you! She has more eyes than Argus ever had, and each one is as sharp as a cambric needle. Of course I apologized and so on, and she forgave me handsomely, and then we fell to discoursing-need I tell you on wha't subject?"

"Love, of course," said Sir Norman.
"Yes, mingled with entreaties to take off her mask that would have moved a heart of stone. It moved, what was botter-the heart of La Masque; and, Kingsley, she has consented to do it; and she says that if, after seeing her face, I still love her, she will be my

'Is it possible? My dear Ormiston, I congratulate you with all my heart!"
"Thank you! After that she left me, and I walked away in such a frenzy of delight that I couldn't have told whether I was treading this earth or the shining shores of the seventh heaven, when suddenly there flew past me a figure all in white-the figure of a bride, Kingsley, pursued by an excited mob. We were both near the river, and the first thing I knew, sho was plump into it, with the crowd behind, yelling to stop her, that she was til of the plague."

"Great Heaven! and was she drown-"No, though it was not her fault. The Earl of Rochester and his page-you remember that page, I fancy—were out in their barge, and the earl picked her up. Then I got a boat, set out after her, claimed her—for I recognized her, of course—brought her ashore, and abound her safe and sound in her own house. What do you think of that?"

"Ormiston," said Sir Norman, catching him by the shoulder, with a very excited face, "is it true?"

"True as preaching, Kingsley, every word of at! And the most extraordinary part of the business is, that her dip in cold water has effectually cured her of the plague; not a trace of it remains."

it remains." Sir Norman dropped his hand and walked on, staring straight before him, perfectly speechless. In fact, no hu-man language in the world could have Cone justice to his feelings at that precise period; for three times that night, in three different shapes, had he seen this same Leoline, and at the same moment he was watching her decked out in royal state in the ruin,

Ormiston had probably been assisting her from her cold bath in the river Astonishment and consternation are words altogether too feeble to express his state of mind; but one idea re-mained clear and bright amid all his mental chaos, and that was, that the Leoline he had fallen in love with dead, was waiting him, alive and well, in London.

"Well," said Ormiston, "you don't speak! What do you think of all this?"

"Think! I can't think—I've got past that long ago!" replied his friend hope-fessly. "Did you really say Leoline was alive and well?"

"And waiting for you—yes, I did, and I repeat it; and the sooner you get back to town, the sooner you will

"Ormistom, what do you mean? Is is possible I can see her tonight?"
"Yes, it is: the dear creature is waiting for you even now. You see, after we got to the house, and she had conserved to become a little matternal must sented to become a little rational, mu-tual explanations ensued, by which it appeared she had ran away from Sir Norman Kingsley in a state of frenzy, had jumped into the river in a similarly excited state of mind and was most anxious to go down on her pretty knees and thank the aforesald Sir Norman for saving her life. What could any one as gallant as myself do un-der the circumstances, but to offer to set forth in quest of that gentleman, and she promptly consented to sit up and wait his coming and dismissed me with her blessing. And, Kingsley, I've a private notion she is as deeply affected by you as you are by her; for, when I mentioned your name, she blushed, yea verily to the roots of her hair: and when she spoke of you, couldn't so much as look me in the face-which is, you must own, a very bad symptom."

"Nonsense!" said Sir Norman, energetically. And had it been daylight, his friend would have seen that he blushed almost as extensively as the lady. "She doesn't know me."
"Ah doesn't she, though? That shows all you know about it! She has seen you go past the window many and many a time; and to see you," said Ormiston, making a grimace under cover of the darkness, "is to love! She told me so herself!"—

"What! That she loved me!" said Sir Norman, his notions of propriety to the last degree sheeted by such a

"Not altogether, she only looked that; but she said she knew you well by sight, and by heart, too, as I inferred from her countenance when she said it. There now, don't make me talk any more for I have told you everything I know, and am about hoarse with my exertions." "One thing only-did she tell you who she was?" 'No, except that her name was Leo-'No, except that her name was Leo-line, and nothing else—which struck me as being slightly improbable. Doubtless she will tell you everything, and one piece of advice I may ven-ture to give you, which is, you may propose as soon as you like without fear of rejection. Here we are at the Golden Crown, so go in and get your horse and let us be off."

All this time Ormiston had been leading his own horse by the bridle, and as Sir Norman silently complied with this suggestion, in five minutes more they were in their sadddles, and galloping at breakneck speed toward the city. To tell the truth, one was not more inclined for silence than the other, and the profoundest and thoughtfulest silence was maintained till they reached it. One was thinking of Leoline, one of La Masque, and both were badly in love and just at that particular moment very happy. Of course the happiness of people in that state never lasts longer than half an hour at a stretch, and then they are plunged back into misery and distraction; but while it does last it is very intense and delightful indeed. Burglar Williams Convicted of Murder.

Sentenced to Be Executed on Good "Friday-Pleadings of a "Spook" Changed a Witness' Mind.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—Henry Williams, accused of the murder of J. E. Varcoe, Queen street grocer, during the burglary on his premises on Nov. 9, was put in the witness-box today to give testimony in his own behalf. He swore that Curtis, his companion in the burglary, first gave him the 38callber revolver with which the murder was committed, and when the fight occurred in Varcoe's room, took it from him and shot Varcoe. Williams, to save bloodshed, according to his statement, rushed at Curtis, and took the revolver from him, and that was how was found beside the witness when he was captured. On cross-examina-tion Williams refused to say anything about his birth or parentage. He met Curtis at Belleville, he said, and came to Toronto with him. There was no intention on his part of following a criminal career. His reason for re-fusing to disclose his identity was because he had a father 76 years of age and mother 66, who would be heart-broken to hear what had befallen him. Before the close of the crown case Mrs. Sanderson, of Montreal, was placed in the box in an endeavor to identify Williams as the man who, under the name of Roy, visited 178 St. George street, Montreal, in which she was a resident. Mrs. Sanderson failed to identify Williams, saying only that he was like a man she had seen there. Williams said he had never been in Montreal, and the crown made no further effort to trace his history.

After lengthy addresses from counsel, and a summary by Chief Justice Meredith, in which it was pointed out that the burglars' tools and other articles found in Williams' possession precluded the acceptance of his statement that he had become involved in the burglary without any criminal intention, the case was given to the jury.

The jurors were out one hour and fifty minutes, and returned a verdict of guilty, with a unanimous recommendation to mercy.

The prisoner made a further state placing the blame on Curtis (or McIntosh), his associate, and saying he neither committed the crime nor had any intention of doing so.

Judge Meredith sentenced Williams to be hanged on April 13, and added that the recommendation of mercy would be forwarded to the crown authorities.

It was discovered late tonight that April 13, the day fixed by Chief Justice Meredith for the hanging of Henry Williams, convicted at the assizes to-day of the Varcoe murder, is Good Friday. In the case of several Yukon murderers, who by inadvertence were sentenced to be hanged on a statutory holiday, Judge Dugas postponed the execution and appealed to Ottawa for instructions. After months of delay a new date was set for the hanging. It could not be ascertained here tonight whether or not the law officers of the crown had given any decision as to the legality of a sentence, the execution of which is set for a statu-tory holiday, which in legal phrase is

New York, Jam. 11.—District Attorney Andrews, of Worcester county, says Alfred Morrison will be arrested tomorrow on the charge of homicide in having, while, as alleged, in a somnambulistic condition, shot and killed the woman known as his wife. The shooting occurred about two weeks ago. A curious feature of the case is the attitude of the dead woman's sister, Mrs. Ihlenburg, who a few days ago was clamorous for the prosecution of Morrison. She now declares that the spirit of the dead woman appeared to her in her sleep and pleaded with her not to push the complaint against

In telling her story Mrs. Rogers said:

"I rose at the usual time, and going of my bedroom, found my mother suffering from a headache. She asked me if I knew of anything that would ease the pain, and I said I did not. Gazed on the Dead Face of Father McGlynn.

Many Evidences of Popular Interest-Impressive Funeral Services.

New York, Jan. 12.—The funeral yesterday of Rev. Dr. Edward McGlynn in St. Stephen's Church, of which he was formerly the pastor, was the occa-sion of a manifestation of popular affection such as has rarely been witnessed. The coffin containing the remains of the beloved priest was deposited at the altar rail of the church at 5:30 a.m., and from that time until the doors were closed at 12:30 p.m., 40,000 persons, it is estimated, looked upon the face of the dead.

For four hours a compact stream of humanity poured into the church. They moved in pairs up the middle aisle to the foot of the coffin; there they parted, one person always going to the right, the other to the left, and then, after gazing upon the face that had been loved by so many thousands, they

Many remained in the church, and the pews were crowded with more than 2,500 persons long before the doors were closed. At that time there were many on the street who had not been able to gain admission.

The head had been slightly raised in deference to an understood wish that everybody in the church might see the features of the dead from different parts of the church.

The purple robes of the priest still clothed his body, and a crucifix was clutched in his hands. The features were the same benevolent expression as in life. The chancel was in black and white. And the candelabra altar fixings and altars were clothed in these somber colors, the white altar cloths having been exchanged for black, with white fringe. To the left of the middle of the sanctuary as one faced the altar was a magnificent cross of flowers surmounted by a dove. right was a large pillow of red carnations, forget-me-nots and mignonette. Among the first to push their through the crowd, with the aid of some 300 policemen detailed to preserve order in the vicinity of the church, were 50 letter carriers from the Letter Carriers' Union, which held Dr. McGlynn in great respect. These men brought a handsome floral wreath with old Celtic lettering, reading, "Saga Theron," or, in English, "Our beloved

AN OBJECT LESSON.

In a Restaurant.

A physician put the query: Have you ever noticed in any large restaurant at lunch or dinner time the large number of hearty, vigorous old men at the tables; men whose ages run from 60 to 80 years; many of them bald and all perhaps gay, but none of them feeble or senile?

Perhaps the spectacle is so common as to have escaped your observation or comment, but nevertheless it is an object lesson which means something. If you will notice what these hearty old fellows are eating you will observe that they are not munching bran crackers nor gingerly picking their way through a menu card of new fangled health foods; on the contrary they seem to prefer a juicy roast of beef, a properly turned loin of mutton, and even the deadly broiled lobster is not altogether ignored.

The point of all this is that a vigorous old age depends upon good di-gestion and plenty of wholesome food and not upon dieting and an endeavor to live upon bran crackers. There is a certain class of food The Cost cranks who seem to believe that meat, coffee and many other good things are rank poisons, but these cadaverous, sickly looking individuals are a walking condemnation of their own theories. The matter in a nutshell is that if the stomach secretes the natural digestive juices in sufficient quantity any wholesome food will be promptly di-geted; if the stomach does not do so, and certain foods cause distress one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal will relieve all difficulty, because they supply just what every weak stomach lacks, pepsin, hydro-chloric acid, diatase and nux. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do not act upon the bowels, and in fact are not strictly a medicine, as they act almost entirely upon the food eaten, digesting it thoroughly and thus gives a much needed rest and giving an appetite for the next meal. Of people who travel nine out of ten use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets knowing them to be perfectly safe to use at any time and also having found out by experience that they are a safeguard against indigestion in any form, and eating as they have to, at all hours and all kinds of food, the
