Protective as the N. P. tariff, which cam twenty years later; but it was still a splendid effort-for the time. We say. "for the time," reason that with the advance of civilization and progress the demand for Protection grows stronger and more popular, so that it is quite natural to look for the adoption of more stringent and more effective measures of Protection by civilized nations near the close of the nineteenth century than were demanded during the middle or later middle of the period. Get it into your head that the civilized world's progress is not towards more Free Trade but towards more Protection. That is if you can do so without a surgical operation, which was Sydney Smith's approved plan for getting a joke into the head of a Scotchman. If you admit in effect that Sir John had grasp of mind enough to understand this tendency of the times and courage enough to act upon his convictions, then you make him out to be indeed one of the world's greatest men, which many people actually believ hum to be after all. With respect to agricultural and manufacturing reciprocity respectively we have still something to say, but must leave it

Raise Horses. Not Banley. Recently published statistics go to show that about one-third of the cavalry men in the English army are without mounts owing to the army horse purchasers being unable to obtain the number required, and attention is again drawn to Canada as a market from which it will be possible to obtain supplies. The number of horses that would be bought here every year would be large and amply suf-ficient to guarantee farmers or stock raisers in present of the standard of horses required direction. The standard of horses required for the cavalry service is not so high but that it can be reached by almost anyone. If a horse is sound, of proper height and average weight, reasonable reliance may be placed on their ac-ceptance by the Commissioners when making their annual rounds as is customary. Farmers, be advised and raise more horses and grow less barley. Your horses on the Toronto market to day are in active demand by Canadian and American buyers and at good prices; your barley is a drug and if you have depended on it for some money just now, and must have it, you have just got to accept what you can gret iffeen cents per bushel less than you expected to get for it. Now, just try and see if we are 't about ripht. aren't about right.
