

THE HOME

THE MARTHAS AND MARYS.

In the intensely interesting study of Christ's life was one of those good motherly kind who made call at the home of his friend, Martha (see Luke 10th). Now Martha was one of the good motherly kind of women who are bound to serve a good meal and do it right. In the words of the Holy Writ she was "umbered about much serving."

Her sister, Mary, however, was not so much concerned about feeding and waiting upon people as she was about the intellectual things and especially about the matter of religion and, as Christ was at that time (and has been ever since) the central figure in the religious world, Mary came and sat at his feet in order to get first-hand the words of life.

Martha did not like that a bit and scolded Mary right there before company and asked the Great Master to send her to the kitchen to help get supper. Now, Christ must have known that the servants and slaves were abundantly able and capable of doing all the serving, for he told her, "Just as he tells many a good woman today." "You art careful and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful and Mary has chosen that good part which I will not take away from her."

I know lots of women who could save large sums of money which they pay out in doctors' bills by paying about half of it out for competent help in the kitchen and for housework, and they could well afford to spend the other half in taking a little trip with husband or daughter, and go on some sort of a vacation. Don't be so "careful and troubled about many things." Yes, I know it is a hard matter, this getting competent help, but if you can't get that help get the best you can and don't worry if the dust does settle on the book case. I like to see things clean and bright as well as any man living, but I would rather see dirt on a inch thick over the whole house than to see it six feet over my wife's grave. It's a fact that many women work themselves to death, trying to keep the house that so and so and special way. The wind which blew the dust in through the front door or the open window keeps right on blowing in a happy, joyous freedom after the careful Martha is old and stiff and lame and ugly with fighting the unequal battle with dust and rain. It keeps coming just the same and finally there is no one to say nay, and then the work of destruction goes on faster than ever. The neat walls and clean floors go down to decay and miss a lot of this, you see, endless work is a thing of the past, better by far that you live in a tent or a cabin and have leisure and contentment than to spend your days "troubled with much serving," and "careful about many things."

Keep out the flies and mosquitoes destroy their breeding places, and kill the mosquito larva, if you can but don't spend the best part of your life accumulating a fine lot of things and the balance of your life in the drudgery of taking care of them.

There are many and better things to do and to be done, and of a kind that will be of benefit, and which shall not be taken from you. Of course some one must serve, food must be prepared, clothing washed and repaired, and many things in the daily routine of life, but I have found there are many ways of avoiding the needless drudgery which many housekeepers go through year after year, and in many cases those who ought not to do the endless drudgery are well able to hire younger and stronger people who badly need the money they could thus earn.

I know a man and, wife whose children are all grown to maturity and have gone to make homes of their own. They have retired from the farm, and built a nice home in town. The man is philosopher enough to take just enough exercise to keep in good health and he enjoys life fully, but the poor mother works harder. If that is possible, than when she was on the farm. The new home, new furniture and other things keep her at work from early morning until late at night. Her husband pleads with her to get a girl to do the work, and for her to take long drives with him about town, and through the country, but she thinks she cannot trust anyone else to care for her beautiful house, her silverware, or her dishes. Her kitchen must be spotless as well as the linen. Well, someone else is going to do the work in that house before long. The husband is taking good care of himself and it won't be long after she is gone until he can easily find some one to come in and be a wife and not a maid of all work.

Before I was married a little over eight years ago the little woman confessed that she did not know how to cook. I told her that I had a cook but did not care to marry her, color was not of the right shade. The colored woman is still a good cook and nothing else, while my wife is, to my notion, the best little wife and mother and homemaker anywhere, and although she has learned to cook, as all good mothers must, she is not required to do much of it and if help fails to do the housecleaning as regularly and as properly as she would like to see it done, we both refuse to see the dust and if the boys do not pick up their plights at night, we sometimes just walk over them and they play with them the next day without the trouble of unpacking them from the toy box.

Don't worry and don't be too careful and troubled about many things.—Health Doctor in Toronto Globe.

TEACH THE BOYS AND GIRLS IN THE FORMATIVE TIME TO AVOID LATER DANGERS

Winnipeg, November 1.—The touring party of the American Purify Federation arrived in Medicine Hat, holding sessions in the afternoon for men and boys in the Methodist church, and for women in the Presbyterian church, were not very largely attended, owing, no doubt to the fact of the delay in the program, there being no morning session as anticipated.

Dr. Bell discussed the question of the white slave traffic and his address was full of startling revelations of which few people in this city had any idea. He laid the blame for the condition of affairs largely on the government of the country whom he stated seemed to delight in the destruction of its boys and girls and make their downfall a source of revenue. The people who allowed the existence of the crime were as guilty as those who practised it. If the church people wished it they could close every white slave market in the country in two weeks. He had a whole lot to say about the conditions in Winnipeg. They were disgraceful in the extreme. The police magistrate had characterized the lecturers as liars and was encouraging the traffic and the maintenance of the segregated area for purposes of revenue.

He pointed out ways in which the traffic might be combated—by post, copies of the law and by enlistment of the sympathy of the public and the press in the movement. This last was the purpose of their campaign, a campaign of publicity. It was high time that something was being done. The race could not stand the roads of disease, caused directly by the social evil. The haylums were being filled with men for no other cause than that they had attempted to sow their own oats. There were victims of disease in every town, paralysis, rheumatism, insanity, spinal and brain diseases caused from the one source.

Dr. Emma Drake, of Denver, followed this address, pointing out a remedy for the evil. The first great step was the creating of a sentiment against the traffic.

present were responsible for the remedy in future generations. If their children got wrong information from wrong sources they could look for no other result than secret vice, subterfuge and deceit in the children. The first seeds of immortality in the child lay in the first subterfuge and falsehood of the mother.

Parents should realize that the beginning of life was next in importance to the salvation of the soul and questions in regard to it should be answered in a clear true manner. There had always been too great a tendency to magnify the evils of fallen women and let the men go unrebuked. The idea that it didn't matter about the boys should be blotted out if the tide of encouragement should be given too to the fallen sisters to reform, otherwise suicide was all that was left in many cases. Special care should be exercised in regard to children at the adolescent period in life when the child, through lack of sympathy, would be most liable to go wrong if not watched.

It rested with the women of the country to raise the standard of morals. Their influence was enormous, and the morals of a country were no higher than the morals of the average woman.

KEEP THE HEART YOUNG

There are things to be sad over, but there are many more to rejoice over. There are life and youth and love and the beautiful world.

Perhaps you have left youth behind you, but at least you had it once upon a time and many of its memories are sweet.

Some women grieve bitterly over the loss of youth. They cannot make up their minds to grow old, and they call on all sorts of artificial aids to keep old age at bay. But rouge will not make sunken cheeks plump nor remove Time's writing, the wrinkles, nor will false hair deceive any one but the woman who wears it.

There is a beauty in growing old gracefully, and the wise woman does not disdain it. Keep your heart young, that is the best way to keep your face so, and the easiest way of keeping the heart young is by looking for the bright side of life.

TO JOIN CARPETS.

If two pieces of carpet are to be joined together, it is a great mistake to make a seam, which causes an unrightly ridge on the right side. The patterns should first be matched, the carpet then reversed and each edge buttonholed firmly with flax thread the color of the groundwork. The two pieces should then be drawn together firmly so that a perfect joint is the result.

Shiloh's Cure

How Rich Woman Works.

Mrs. E.H. Harriman's day is mapped out with the systematic precision of a trained business woman. It allows for no luxurious feminine lapses from schedule. And she permits herself only the week-end as a season of rest from her arduous interests.

When at Arden, for example, she rises early and motors to the Erie station, where she catches the train that reaches New York at 10.45 o'clock. At the Forty-second street ferry she takes a taxicab to her office. This is on the second floor of 474 Fifth avenue, with windows over looking the street.

She reads reports and issues orders steadily until 1.30 o'clock, when she walks to the St. Regis for luncheon and then goes back to the office for two or three hours more thorough and patient work. Her walk and luncheon are thus the only breaks in the routine of her labor, for she returns to Arden only a time for dinner. And this is the average day of one of the richest women in the world.—Women's Magazine.

Social Conventions

The observance of social conventions may vary with the community and the class of people. Position and money give a prominence and distinction to which dignity must be allied if prestige be accorded. Social life throughout various ages has survived by adherence to certain defined principles. To these it is as essential for the simple life to conform as for the most highly placed. The whirlpool of modern life keeps all sorts and conditions of people incessantly mingled in daily work and pleasure.

Thoughtless or ignorant breaking down of convention usually results in a loss of self-respect. It may not be apparent to the individual at first, and frequently when a realization comes refined inclination may be too coarsened for even a vague feeling of regret.

A mother with strict ideas as to the oversight of her daughter may be thought of old fashioned by the young girl. To feel rebellious over some careful injunction of the mother is not an unusual feeling for a girl with little knowledge of the world. Especially is this true where the family life is patterned along simple lines. Those of more pretentious living are early taught to conform to a strict code. Intelligent and loving mothers may be as eager to secure pleasure and happiness for their daughters as the young girls are anticipating. Fondness though should never blind a mother to her duty of safeguarding her daughter.

A strict mother receives her reward when her daughters reach years of discretion and are able to see with the world's eye. The jolly, bright girl on the go and giving scant heed to convention may retain her innocent mind and wholesome nature but there is always the gravest risk incurred. Such irresponsible conduct invariably arouses the censure of the community and the worst construction may be put on very harmless proceedings.

A young girl never gains in attractiveness when trying to ape an audacious young matron. A mother with a strong sense of duty will pay close attention to her daughters' combs and reading. Only so may she keep in touch with the development of character.
