

now been delivered out of the house of bondage, should themselves forget the moral of man's inhumanity to man: that those who attempt to destroy others, destroy themselves.

In the annals of nations, there are times when dramatic, unprecedented efforts are made to accomplish in a short space of time something that would normally take scores or hundreds of years. The attempt to establish Israel on a sound economic, social and political basis is one of these great experiments. As such, it is not only of interest to the members of the Jewish race -- bound by their hearts to the Holy Land -- it is of concern to all mankind. Men and women of good-will, the world over, are hoping and praying that Israel once again has come into its heritage.
