

set way. To the
of the Holly interesting to

tion for about
epi. for another
not without vegetation, after peak has a small shallow in the spring, and receives its from the western portion of other side of the deep ravine of known as The Dome. This to the mountaineer, and not extensive.

point of a ridge about a mile in elevation 4500 feet. It effectually back of Grouse, which is about ed to a narrow saddle or divide.

the point to Crown Creek, a to the east it slopes gradually down to the point where the Crown Creek which bears a mile along the ridge precipitously on the south and east.

to the north-east, terminwhich overlooks Lynn Creek. altitude of 4700 feet, and com-mountain and the great stone-shoot known as "The Crater," a very this locality are not volcanic, but remarkable mass of rock beside the the "Camel," is seen to advanthan is sometimes found in such from this side it is necessary to back from the saddle between Dam care must be exercised. But

