

Answer 15 I would report any lights that would appear in sight either from sea or land. If the ship was drifting towards an iceberg or growler I would report it to my superior officer. If I was doubtful of the position of the ship, I would take a cast of the lead and report the findings.

NOTE- If any of your men fall sick while on the ice it is your duty to see that these men are looked after and at once despatch some man immediately to the nearest ship if not convenient to get to your own for assistance.

NOTE And if any help needed while on the ice in case of sickness or accident always make a signal by placing three flags on the pole if it is impossible to get assistance otherwise.
