Coroner's Jury Names Braman In O'Leary Case

At Inquest Held Last Night Laxity of Court Sentences Given as a Cause of Crime Wave—Witness Tells of Policeman O'Leary's Struggle With The Prisoner After Fatal Shot Was Fired

"We, the jury, empaneled upon the inquest to inquire into the death of Frank O'Leary, find that the said Frank O'Leary came to his death as the result of loss of blood and peritonitis, caused originally by a bullet penetrating his body, which was discharged from a revolver in the hand of John Braman on Monday, July 6, 1914, at about 11 o'clock, a. m., he having survived until 11 o'clock on Monday, July 13, at which time he died, being at the General Public Hospital, St. John (N. B.)

"We, your jury, at this inquest feel very strongly that the outcome of this tragedy and the crimes that have been committed of late are due to a large extent to the laxity of the sentences given in our courts. This was the verdict which was returned about midnight last night after eight witnesses had given evidence, before Coroner Roberts, in the inquest into the death of Frank E. O'Leary, special police officer, and the jury, consisting of the following had been retired only about fifteen minutes: A. M. Rowan (foreman), S. W. McLaughlin, E. Quinn, Wilson Hatfield, John Bond, Bayard Silwell and George W. Currie. Many of the witnesses heard the evidence and intense interest was shown, a great many staying until after midnight when the verdict was brought in.

The court opened at 8.10 o'clock. Thomas Gillespie was the first witness, he testified that he was residing at 120 Patrick street, rear, in the same house as that in which the Braman family resides. His story of the case was as follows: "I had been home that day ill, and was lying in bed when at 11 o'clock when I heard a scuffle in the toilet. I heard no words—nothing except the tussle. Soon I heard a sharp report, but at that time I did not imagine it was a revolver. The scuffle continued and I came into the room of the toilet which enters from my home. I heard another sharp report, which I felt sure was the report of a revolver. I opened the closet door and saw O'Leary, whom I only knew by sight, and Braman in a scuffle. I went in and helped me take this man." He had Braman by the neck. His head was down near the floor but not altogether on it. I rushed in and took hold of Braman's right arm and stretched it out on the floor. Then I said to the officer: "He is a hothead for I saw the revolver in the right hand. The officer answered: 'Yes, he has shot me. We both had hold of the prisoner at that time.' Put Handcuffs On.

"We got him down on the floor while the officer took the revolver from him. I saw him blow on the revolver, and I stood O'Leary up on the floor. 'Pass me the handcuffs,' he said, pointing to where they were hanging. I passed them to him and between us we managed to put them on the prisoner's wrists. O'Leary was very defiant and searched him. 'There's some money in my vest pocket. You may as well take that,' Braman called out. O'Leary took the money away from him. 'The officer appeared to be very nervous and weak and could hardly speak for want of breath. We took the prisoner out of the alley to St. Patrick street. O'Leary held his head between his hands and clasped about the handcuffs. The officer collapsed and fell to his knees. He still clung to the prisoner, however, until they came. When others had arrived, O'Leary appeared to be growing weaker. He fell to the sidewalk and stretched out on his back. Persons whom I didn't know caught hold of the prisoner and held him. O'Leary called out a revolver and pointing it at Braman who was a few feet away, he said: 'If he gets away from me I will shoot.' I knew he would shoot Braman. 'Somebody helped to put him in the ambulance and I leaped to him. After this the prisoner came and took charge of the prisoner. He took him back to the house. I heard Jenkins say to him: 'Where did you get the goods?' The prisoner didn't speak. I never heard him speak at all after that and Jenkins took him away. 'Dr. W. W. White told of taking the case after O'Leary had been brought to the hospital. In conclusion I might say that the bullet had been ascertained by X-ray photographs, with the assistance of Dr. Frank Hogan and Dr. C. C. Malcolm. A witness operated on O'Leary to stop the internal hemorrhages, which they succeeded in doing. On account of the serious condition of the patient, no effort was made to locate the bullet. Witness said that today's session of the juryman Bayard Silwell asked the witness if the operation, together with the bullet wound, would cause peritonitis, or whether the bullet would in itself wound cause the complication. Germs With Bullet.

Dr. White—Peritonitis is caused by convergence into the abdominal cavity of germs, so-called. A bullet, not having been sterilized, would very likely indeed carry germs and so cause peritonitis. In the operation wound, on the other hand, the instruments used and everything employed on it, are sterilized. The skin is disinfected too and every possible precaution is taken to prevent the entrance of germs. In spite of this, however, it occasionally happens that germs still enter. It would be impossible to state absolutely that no germs would possibly enter through an operation, while on the other hand they would almost certainly enter through a bullet wound.

"The bullet wound is quite sufficient to infect the abdominal cavity without looking to an operation to hasten it. I believe in this case that the bullet wound caused peritonitis. In addition, this man was bleeding to death and if an operation had not been made to check the hemorrhage he would have been dead long before sunset on Monday night." Dr. D. C. Malcolm told of O'Leary being brought to the hospital and that one of the orderlies, George Stewart, handed witness a revolver which he said O'Leary gave him. Witness broke the revolver and found that two of the five shells had been exploded. He took a watch and a sum of money from the prisoner's pockets and placed them in the patient in the hospital and of his deposition taken the first day that the patient was in the hospital.

Sergeant Aaron Hastings was the next witness. He told of accompanying the prisoner, Braman, together with Magistrate Ritchie, and Police Clerk Henderson to the hospital, where O'Leary's

RUSSIA HAS AN APOSTLE OF PITY

Plan For Betterment of The Hungry Peasants

SUCCESSOR OF TOLSTOY

Korolenko is Editor and Author—Practically the Creator of the Provincial Press in the Czar's Realm

Korolenko is Russia's greatest literary artist, her most influential editor, her keenest social reformer, her most widely traveled pilgrim, the closest in touch with the customs and the spirit of her scattered races. Above all he is her "Apostle of Pity," the man who first taught the indifferent, culture-proud "intelligentsia" what a fund of virtues and genius lies latent in the peasant. Hence Tolstoy's death Russia looks to Korolenko as her spiritual guide.

Count Ilya Tolstoy, Tolstoy's second son. He is engaged with Korolenko in a great scheme for settling poor peasants on reclaimed waste land. Korolenko is the successor to Tolstoy in a second sense. He is the one Russian apart from Tolstoy and a few sectarian mystics and prophets, of whom the simple people have ever made a cult. To the simple home in Poltava where Korolenko passes the summer, come hundreds of ragged and footsore peasants to ask for intercession and redress. The peasant pioneers which family intending to emigrate to Siberia sends in advance, crowd to Korolenko's door for counsel, in the sure knowledge that the great man who himself, as a Siberian, ventured carpentered, soled shoes, and painted knots for a living, will give them sound advice. And Korolenko shelters them in his house in the way of Samuel Johnson, and sends them forth with his blessing.
