STORY OF THE DUKE OF NOR-FOLK.

STORY OF THE DUKE OF NOR-FOLK. There is a small Catholic church in one of the streets of the Strand, says M A. P., where many notables—po-ilitati and social—may be seen from time to time at the Sunday devotions. A few weeks ago a collection for the church was held at the door, after the midday mass. A very unpretentious genteman passed out, dropped some coins in the plate as he weat. To the storesiment of the plate holder, they were sovereigns. A look at the quict collector that there had been a mis-take: so he hurched rapidly after the gentieman to explain. The gentieman miled courteously as he replied. "Weil be the mistake pass this time." The streater than ever when on relating his "worderful experience." He was told that the quiet boking sentieman was the Duke of Norfolk. No doubt the duke did not make a mistake in plac-ing the sovereigns on the church plate. The Duke of Norfolk is the mest prom-ing the sovereigns on the church plate. ALAVE TO BUSINESS. Mr. Kipling considers a letter to an Australian, correspondent, with ibig little pleasandry: — There is a very nice story going the rounds of some of your men, who were surrounded by Boers with rifes and artillery for sev-eral days—weeks almost. When they were relieved, (they fought like de-mons), someone caked, a trooper what, had happened. "Well," said he, 'there was any amount of firing, so, we dus trenches. About two feet down we got on the color of gold, and after that we just went to work sinking a shaft. Some of us are coming back to form a company, and I think we ought to take in a few leading Boers, because we di fi ti hadn't been for them.' Very sincerely yours, Rudyard Kipling."
