What Response the Market Has Made to the

Reverses of the Campaign-Japai's Se

Last Wednesday's disaster to the Russian feet outside Port Arthur, with the loss of admiral and two ships, has been reflected, on the markets, by a rise of 2 points in Japanese bonds and a fall of 1% in Russian. This double movement is interesting because to onventional theory of war markets—the theory that victory advances a nation's pub-ties and that defeat depresses them—has seemed to apply. For instance, though it did put down Russian 4 per cents apanese 4s by 5½ points. Not only was this true, but between 'he severe depression of february and the end of March, Russian bonds recovered 8 points, while Japanese to down only 6½. The interesting the severe depression is drawn only 61%. The interesting the severe depression bonds fell 5 points lower. Even with this below the January level, while Russian 4s are down only 61%. The interesting the maintenance of values in Russian securities. A London actuaria proaches, It is plainly bellet that such ne-chas made possible maintenance of values in Russian securities. A London actuaria prostice of the close of March, the Russian 4s yield from Japanese 4s would be 6%.—N. Y. evening Post.
