did not desire to follow up this subject further. It was well understood, and he supposed hon, members of the House had all made up their minds to the course they intended to pursue in this matter. The hon, member for Carleton had characterized the speech of the hon, member for Victoria as revolutionary. However, there was not much in the speech of the hon, member for Carleton requiring an answer, and therefore he would pass it over; and as an humble member of this House tender his heartfult thanks to the hon, member for, North Outario who, a Protestant, took a large and liberal view of this whole question. That hon, gentleman took this position "I wish to see my Catholic fellow-citizens enjoy the same liberty I enjoy;" and he cited Ontario and Quebec as examples of the justice of the law that obtained there, and he asked that the same justice which was meted out to the Catholics of New Brunswick, and that they be placed on a footing of equality with the rest of Her Majesty's subjects, they asked no more and he (Mr. Devilin) could tell the House that if this was refused the Catholics of this country would continue to agitate this question, they would continue to fight every Parliament and every Government that might be brought into existence, and no Government would find peace or rest till justice was done in this matter.
