And her sister too to festival, was suddenly awakened by an ominous whisper, in a juvenile voice, at the window, "Come, Anne, come, to the wakening!"

A little four year old Western girl was running into the house the other day, exclaiming, "Mamma, mamma, I've seen Jack Frost! I've seen Jack Frost!" "Were did you see him, my darling?" queried the mother. "Oh, I saw the tip of his tail hanging over the eaves." She had seen an icicle.

A painful accident happened recently to a farmer named Keeler, of Amarath, N. H. He was engaged in stacking straw, throwing down fodder to the cattle, and after getting through, pitched down the fork, which stuck in the straw. He then jumped down and lit upon the handle of the fork, which entered his body in the Extor—The Extor Towns describes a curious incident that occurred at night for London, driving a span of good horses. He reached London early next morning, and started the same day to return. After pretty hard driving reached Mr. Thos. Potts, a well known horse dealer, who was waiting for him. He found the horses to be quite blind. Mr. Potts did all he could for them, but they both died during the night.

A sad accident recently happened to a son of Mr. Chambers, who resides on the sixth division of the townships of Brant and Greenwich. The young man, who was twenty years of age, had been out in the bush chopping, when a limb fell from the tree, butt end striking him on the front part of the head and fracturing the skull. Several pieces of the skull were driven out and a quantity of it which had been in the brain was raised. The sufferer was at last Four persons were burned to death at Evansville, Ind., on Thursday, by the destruction of a grocery and dwelling and dwelling occupied by C. Mehr. There were, when the fire broke out, three persons in the house, including Mr. Mehr, his wife, and six children. Mehr seized two of the children and rushed through the flames, and a boarder saved another of the children. The other three rushed out and seeing that some of his children were missing, again ran into the house, and were not again seen alive. When found, they had clapped in his arms the three children, who were lying on the floor, badly-burned and burned almost to a cinder.

The Spanish question is to be rendered a little more intelligible than before.

become difficult, not for ordinary mortals also, to know which is really the ruling power in the country. The king is the nominal head, but the hitherto been tacitly recognized—now don Carlos proposes to get crowned King and to constitute a government, which shall be the only true one, and to which all the other powers must submit. Of course, he will swear to support the liberties of the people—that is a thing done by every pretender, and on which, considering how little the people are interested, he may safely count. He is more likely to carry out his intention of drawing five million dollars as "a first instalment" of the contributions of the provinces to the cause of the Madrid Government, than things should have come to this pass, ay, after the suppression of the Carlistene, an insurrection, energetic measures would in a short time have been taken to suppress the Carlists. But there is no real government in the country—nearly a

Prince Bismarck is not as quickly successful with the conquered provinces of Alsace and Lorraine as he would wish the mass of the people offers determined resistance to the measures enforced for the thorough Germanization of the country—the deputies to the Reichstag, emulating the Czech members of the Austrian diet, have withdrawn from Berlin, and the Chancellor has had to leave the Reichstag to the opposition. He is by no means disposed to let matters rest, Alsace-Lorraine must look forward to dark days of constitutional (?) oppression. It is strange, however, to find the German press, and the German and English newspapers, so friendly to Germany and things German, in view of the fact that a hundred years ago displaced an equally fervent and honest feeling. It is true that Bismarck's conduct toward the French people is not so unbecomingly inhuman as that of Napoleon, but the moral quality of the feelings of the victor and
