

that men must have a moral ideal held up to them, in addition to the strong appeal made to their best interests. In the last analysis it is the business of the Church to keep that ideal before men, and if the net result of the modern socialistic movement should be to stimulate the Church to attend more strictly than before to this great mission, her representatives may well "thank God and go forward."