

man who killed him fairly. And because he was brave and fought for France, I am proud to handle his tunic."

As men go, John à Cleeve was not a fool; and yet, as he gazed at her kindled face, the one thought that rose above his own shamed confusion was a thought that her earnestness marvellously made her beautiful.

(To be continued.)