Rippling Rhymes

IN DAYS TO COME:

Wonder what we'll talk about, when peace is here once more; can we discuss our aches and gout, as in the days of yore? Of course the war will be discussed for long years, three or nine; but some day t'will grow stale and must take in its gory sign. And when war talk has had its day and has become a crime, can we thrash out the price of hay as in the olden time Can you sit down with torpid friend, your back against a wall, and talk for, long, long hours on end, about a game of ball. And will you ever, do you think, wear out your trusty throat denouncing some long winded gink who'd like to have your vote? I wonder what will be our theme when war's been dead so long it seems much like an evil dream that made a night go wrong. It's hard to think of grownup gents in all the years to come, discussing picayunes or cents, or pups or chewing gum. But doubtless in a little while we'll sing the same old tune, the same old themes will be in style —for we forget so soon! And you will spend a lot of time discussing gnats and fleas; and I will write a noble rhyme about the grocer's cheese.

OPEN EVENINGS.

Germans standing on the top of the dug-out. A German officer covered him was a revolver, but the major dodged, and ran down the trench. It was only putting off the inevitable. The trench, whichever way he turned, was full of Germans, and the major was captured.

The Germans drove the Munsters back slowly through the ruins of Epehy that night. But they did not capture the whole of the village until next day. A small handful of Irishmen led by the same officer who had fought so gallantly in Tetard Wood, held their ground in the village, and only surrendered when they had fired their last round and thrown their last bomb.

The next day a German communique informed the world that "The heights of Epehy have been captured after a hard struggle in which the British were surrounded." That short sentence is high tribute to the remnant of that brave battalion that battled on, and is a worthy epitaph to those fearless Irishmen who in front of Epehy fell for the great cause.

WOULD SAVE REMNANT OF CHIPPAWA REDOUBT

The plans for closing the mouth of the Welland river for the Hydro-Electric Commission have been slightly altered so as to preserve at least a remnant of the historic Chippawa redoubt.
