FREE TRADERS AND THE COLONIES.

Bright and Cobden, as anyone who was present at the meeting will testify, never spoke of the colonies disrespectfully or unkindly. What they deprecated was the undue prolongation of the period of infancy and tutelage, with the needless expense and constant danger which it entailed. Their opinions on that subject could not have been more decided than those of Sir George Cornwall Lewis, the author of the standard work on the Government of Dependencies, Palmerston's favorite lieutenant and desired heir in the leadership of their party. Sir Frederick Rolner, the permanent Under-Secretary for the colonies, was a decided emancipationist. The same, probably, is true of Mr. Sedley, the founder of Canterbury, New Zealand, who said: "I would rather be governed by a Nero on the spot than governed by a board of angels in London; because we could, if the worst came to the worst, cut off the Nero's head, but we could not get at the board in London at all." As a proof that disregard of the colonies did not prevail in the circle of Bright and Cobden, it may be mentioned that it was owing to the hint of one of that circle that notice was for the first time taken of the colonies in the Queen's speech. Some there were, even among strong Conservatives, who in private at least looked forward to a union of the whole English-speaking race upon this continent, by the junction of Canada with the United States. Nor was this possibility alien to the thoughts of Mr. Gladstone, who suggested, as a solution of the question between the North and the South, that the North should let the South go and unite with Canada. It is difficult to say why in this there was anything more unnatural or disloyal than there is in the proposal, now rather in vogue, for the combination of Great Britain and her colonies with the United States in an Anglo-Saxon confederation for the purpose of "imposing peace upon the world" which certainly implies a fusion of the councils and forces of Canada as a member of the Empire with those of the United States.

The policy of emancipation, looking forward to the elevation of colonial dependencies into nations bound to the Mother Country by the tie of affection, can at all events hardly be said to have been meaner or more disparaging than a policy which assumes that the tie of the colonies to the Mother Country is one of commercial interest and can be preserved only by the concession of fiscal advantage. The emancipationist policy, though now flouted, was, however, not without effect in its day. It brought about an extension of colonial self-government and the withdrawal of the military occupation. The military occupation having been withdrawn, there was an end of the series of wars with Maori and Kaffirs, the expense and cruel character of which Bright and Cobden had denounced, without thereby showing any want of good feeling towards the colonies. Prof. Godwin Smith in February Canadian Magazine.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Is the Newcastle Board of Trade defunct? There is some question which the Board should consider at an early date.

That Town of Newcastle bill of $2, for repairing the street approach to the registry office, came up for consideration of the Council. It should be passed and preserved. Perhaps the Town of Newcastle Association would give it a vote in the Council. World.

The bill was not for repairing the street but for an approach to the registry office. Private bills are not expected to pay for such a purpose. Why not the Municipality?

Mr. H. A. McKewen has been chosen as the Liberal candidate to contest St. John in the coming contest and Dr. J. J. Bond has been chosen by the Conservatives.

GOOD-NIGHT.

I am not brave enough to sing The requiem of a life just dead; That word "good-night" would surely bring The shadow upon sufferer's wing. Come, let us say good-night instead, Marks the sure ending of it all.

See where upon the water's crest The sky comes down, a samite pall— To our poor vision, dim at best, That curtain of rare amethyst. Marks the sure ending of it all.

MUSKRAT ARCHITECTURE.

Seemingly Careless it is a Wonderfully Constructed and Comfortable House. The muskrat builds a most comfortable house. In an article entitled "The Keeper of the Water Gate," published in Leslie's Popular Monthly, Mr. Charles G. D. Roberts describes this strictly utilitarian structure. The entrance, dug with great and persistent toil from the very bottom of the bank, for the better discouragement of the muskrat's deadliest enemy, the mink, runs inward for nearly two feet, and then upward on a long slant some five or six feet through the natural soil, to a point where the shore is dry land at the average level of the water. Over this exit, which is dry at the time of the building, the muskrat raises his house.

The house is a seemingly careless, roughly rounded heap of grass roots, long water-weeds, lily roots and stems and moss with a few sticks woven into the foundation. The site is cunningly chosen, so that the roots and stems of alders or other trees give it secure anchorage, and the whole structure, for all its apparent looseness, is so well compacted as to be secure against the sweep of the spring freshets. About six feet in diameter at the base, it rises about the same distance from the foundation, a rude, soldier-hatched dam, of which something more than three feet may show itself above the ice.

To the unobservant eye the muskrat house in the alders might look like a mass of dirt in which the rank water-grass had taken root. But within the clumsy pit is a shapely, small, warm chamber, lined with the softest grasses. From one side of the chamber the muskrat slants down to another and much larger chamber, the floor of which at

Lord Wolseley's new book of military recollections, "The Cavalry," is a volume of 300 pages, published by the War Office. It is a most interesting and valuable work, and is well worth a perusal by all who are interested in the history of the Cavalry.

From this chamber lead down two passages, one, the main passage, opening frankly in the channel of the creek, and the other, longer and more devious, terminating in a narrow and curiously concealed exit, and a submerged root. This passage is little used, and is intended chiefly as a way of escape in case of an extreme emergency, such as, for example, the invasion of a particularly enterprising mink by way of the main water-gate. The muskrat is no match for the snakeswift, bloodthirsty mink, except in the one accomplishment of holding his breath under water, and a mink must be very ravenous, or quite mad with the blood-lust, to dare the deep water-gate and the long subaqueous passage to the muskrat's citadel at seasons of average high water. In times of drought, however, when the entrance is nearly uncovered and the water goes but a little way up the dark tunnels, the mink will often glide in, slaughter the garrison and occupy the well-built citadel.

Curious Western Romance. For some time past two young ranchers have been seeking the hand of a fair maid in the neighborhood of Calgary. There came a crisis a few evenings ago when a dance was held in that section. The dance was at the home of the young lady in question, and the two suitors were invited, and were talking over the affair, and one wagged a saddle horse against two steers as to who should have the first dance. Two judges and a referee were chosen by the party, and the young lady, and she showed a preference for the chap who bet his saddle horse. Everybody at the dance seemed to know about the bet, and there were many side bets made, and the winner of the bet, with a bill of sale, took two cattle belonging to his rival and at once butchered one. The father of the young fellow who lost his bet tried to prevent the winner from taking the cattle, claiming the cattle did not carry the brand of his son. So enraged was the old gentleman that he made a journey to Calgary to invoke the law, but not one of the city's many lawyers cared to take the case, and he returned home disheartened.

According to the story the young lady's father knew all about the bet, and when the girl chose the man who wagered his horse, the parent was so angry that he took his daughter upstairs and lectured her on her choice, as he favored the beaten rival. The whole affair has caused much talk in the neighborhood.

A New York correspondent writes that Mr. William A. Cassin, son of the late Senator Cassin, who is now in New York City, has been elected one of the original members of the North American Affiliation of the O. K. Club. The O. K. Club was founded in London two years ago, and its objects, broadly speaking, are to promote good-fellowship among persons interested in science, art and literature. Membership is perpetual, and the oath administered on election is a pledge to oppose whatever is injurious to science, art and literature. No member has ever been expelled who has not accomplished work of recognized merit. Mr. Cassin is a student at the Toronto School of Art, is the first and so far the only representative of Canada in the club.

Quebec as a Mineral Province. The Province of Quebec takes a high place as a producer of economic minerals. In some lines, notably asbestos, graphite and apatite, it takes first rank in Canada, and the output from the asbestos mines has in late years largely controlled the world's market. In other lines, such as gold, iron, copper and mica, the deposits are very extensive.

Table with 2 columns: Mineral, Quantity, Value. Includes Copper, Gold, Silver, Asbestos, Mica, etc.

The principal operations in iron smelting have been confined to the bog-iron ores of the St. Francis River, and those of the St. Maurice River. At the latter place smelting operations were commenced in 1738, and the industry has been carried on steadily to the present time. The supply of ore is largely obtained by dredging carried on in Lac a la Tortue.
