Good Pastry

Sometimes a person gets tired of their own cooking and welcomes a change. The change, however, in order to satisfy that longing, must be the equal, if not better, than the home cooking. ## Electric Cooking Becoming Popular

The Better, Cleaner and More Sanitary Way of Cooking Making Headway

Now that an agitation has been started in Newcastle for an all-day electric service, perhaps the following valuable information, from Conservation, may be of interest to those who are backing up the movement, and also prove an incentive to those who have not yet decided to give it their support.

The increasing popularity of electric cooking is well evidenced by the attention which is being given to this subject in the press. That it is a better, cleaner and more sanitary way of cooking was never questioned. The only objection has been the high cost in comparison with coal, gas or other fuels. Formerly the cost of both the electric range, or oven, and the current were practically prohibitive. Two or three years ago the prices of electric energy in most Canadian centres were so reduced that electric cooking became cheaper than the older methods. This has had the effect of stimulating the manufacture of cheaper electric cooking appliances, as it became evident that a much larger field was being opened and an enormous demand could not fail to follow. Thus, the second objection to electric cooking is now practically eliminated, as a good electric range costs very little more than a gas range.

An important point, often disregarded when the saving by electric cooking is compared, is the excessive loss in meat shrinkage by the older methods. For instance it is not generally realized that an eight pound roast of beef weighs only five and a half pounds after roasting by gas, while, if cooked by electricity, only three-quarters of a pound is lost. With other meats and different sizes of roasts similar results obtain.

Another great advantage of electric cooking is the precise manner in which it can be accomplished. The results of cooking experiments in electric ovens indicate that it is possible to reduce the art of cooking with electricity to an exact science. If definite rules of time and temperature were formulated for cooking each article of food, the inexperienced housewife could obtain uniformity of results with the expenditure of a minimum of attention and fuel. In this connection the following summary, giving the results of scientific research, is of interest.

1. The best temperature for roasting is 100 deg. Cent., the loss in weight of the roasts being greater if a higher temperature is used.

2. It is cheaper to roast at a temperature of 100 to 120 deg. Cent. than at 180 deg.; the only advantage of the higher temperature is that the time required is shorter.

3. For the purpose of searing, the oven is sometimes heated for a very short time to 240 deg. Cent., but it is found that by performing this operation on top of the stove at least one kilowatt-hour may be saved.

4. For baking, the temperatures should be materially higher. Biscuits require a temperature of 220 deg. Cent.; a small size loaf of bread 210 deg. Cent.; sponge cake, 180 deg. Cent.

5. In baking large quantities, when an oven must be used during a fairly long period without being allowed to cool between batches, it is more economical to use slightly higher temperatures than those given above. For instance, if several batches of bread are to be baked, the temperature of the oven should be raised to 230 deg. Cent.—L. G. D. in Conservation.
