NOTES OF TRAVEL:

And Reminiscences of a Pleasant Tour.

I. C. MORRIS.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

LUGGAGE AND FINANCE.

Travellers and tourists like all other classes of people, fall into mistakes, and cause themselves a lot of unnecessary expense. Perhaps in no other phase is this so noticeable as in the matter of luggage. The novice going abroad is not aware of all the shifting and checking which are attached to luggage; not of the inconvenience which an extra value of an extra parcel sometimes entails. Because of this not a few handicap themselves, by bringing with them many articles of wearing apparel which are never used, and which from first to last are only in one's way. But unfortunately this is not known until too late, and it gradually dawns upon the novice that much of the contents of his trunk is nothing more than useless dead-weight; and when the situation is further considered it is discovered that even the trunk itself is hardly necessary, and that beyond a spare suit, and an overcoat or rain coat, very little else is required.

Our tour lasted six months, and in numbers our party varied from four to six persons; and from the experience of the lot we learned how to make a holiday, and what to do, and what not to do, and what to expect, and what not to expect. This was all worth learning, and we write this for the benefit of those, who like ourselves, have not had much experience in travelling in strange lands. Of course in starting on such a tour, one naturally thinks of a lot of items that may be necessary, and therefore all these little commodities are packed in the trunk or placed in the valise. This reminds me of a medium-sized valise, with a fair sized satchel, or hand bag, are quite large enough for the use and comfort, and for the necessities of a holiday tour. At every turn the traveller can purchase whatever is required; so that the finance is the essential factor, and not the packages of luggage. Ten thousand shops exhibit ten thousand articles of clothing, and as most of the travelling is done under cover, the necessity of storm proof apparel is not very great. And then the weather is so fine that only for winter season should pleasure seekers encumber themselves with heavy luggage. This is how we found it, and having begun in August, and travelled until March we had ample opportunity to study the situation.

In the matter of finance there is much to be learned in travelling; and there are different mediums of exchange, and one requires to look ahead when exchange is high—as at present. For our part, we procured a letter of credit here at home from the Bank of Nova Scotia, and we found it entirely safe, and satisfactory; and whatever city we presented our letter, it was readily honoured, and the courtesy of the staff was of itself pleasure, and uplift. At one large American city we asked the banker by exchange was so high, and why

Canadian paper was at such a discount. His reply was, to us at least a strange one, but he evidently meant what he said. He replied as follows: "Canada's debt to the U.S.A. is growing so large that we are getting afraid she will never be able to pay us." This was new to us; but as we continued our tour and noted the fluctuation of our English currency, and now notice that American exchange is still high, we are beginning to think that there was "more truth than poetry" in the banker's statement.

At Boston our letter of credit expired. We therefore asked the manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia of that city if he could advance us some money on our own word, or without wiring home. We were entire strangers to him, not having even seen him before. He was very business like, and asked us if he could ring up any firm in Boston who knew us, and he suggested the Robinson Export Company. We agreed that he make any enquiry he wished about our financial standing. He then went to the phone and rang up the firm, and whatever reply they gave the manager, he turned around with beaming face, and it seemed that we could have had Bank and all if we wished. We take this opportunity of thanking the Robinson Export Company for their good word in our favour.

Mobbed U. S. Consulate.

Dublin, July 21.—(United News).—Laborites backed up a demand for the release of James Larkin, imprisoned in the state of New York under the criminal anarchy law, by a noisy demonstration to-day at the American consulate. The consulate is now under heavy guard.

While the demonstration did not approach violence, for a time an ugly situation threatened to develop. The men were armed with revolvers and in a determined mood. There were thousands in the mob.

The demonstration started at the markets, where workmen with revolvers in their hands persuaded hundreds of men to drop their work and form a procession. From this place they proceeded to the docks, where hundreds more willingly forgot their work and joined the demonstrators.

Thence they marched to the consulate where they boomed and hissed to no effect, for some time.

The authorities at once took steps to guard the building from violence.

The Democratic Candidate.

The pending presidential election in the United States might be called the Ohio campaign, because the candidates of the two great parties are natives of that State; they reside there and both carry on the business of publishing Ohio newspapers. Both also have long been prominent in the public life of the State. Mr. Harding, the Republican candidate, represents Ohio in the Federal Senate, and the Democratic candidate, the Hon. James M. Cox, is Governor of the State.

Governor Cox was born at Jacksonburg, Ohio, on March 31, 1870, the son of a farmer of moderate means. He grew up as do most boys in farm homes, attending the public school and helping with the farm work. From the public school he passed to the high school, where his academic training seems to have been completed. He learned the printing trade, taught school for a time, and then worked on the local staff of a newspaper in Cincinnati.

Fortune evidently favored him, for at the age of twenty-eight he was able to purchase a daily newspaper in Dayton, Ohio, and five years later to purchase another in an adjacent county. Out of these grew what is known as the News League of Ohio. His publications have been successful, not only in a financial sense, but as influential exponents of public opinion, always, of course, on the side of the Democratic party.

The publisher became a leader in State politics and in 1909 and again in 1913, the Democrats elected him to Congress. Two terms gave him a wide experience in the federal field which will be exceedingly useful now, when he has to appeal to the whole country as a candidate for the presidency. Then came the governorship of Ohio, to which he was elected by large majorities. Governor Cox's present term will expire in January next.

Ohio has twenty-four votes in the Electoral College that elects the President. Mr. Wilson received them in the last election, and with Governor Cox as their candidate, the Democrats expect once more to carry the State.

Wise Men Say—

That if you would earn more you must learn more.

That to go far, it will help to start early each morning.

That some men never recognize an opportunity unless it is labelled.

That wise men are usually like sponges: they seek to absorb all they can.

That poverty is no disgrace, but there is precious little else that can be said for it.

That the man who quarrels with his bread and butter is likely to dine on scraps.

That trying to do business without advertising is like a man winking at a girl in the dark.

That yesterday is dead—forget it; to-morrow does not exist—don't worry; to-day is here—use it!

That in the assurance of strength there is strength, and they are the weakest, however strong, who have no faith in themselves or their powers.

That not one really great man has achieved greatness except by coming over the path of thorns, hardships, disappointments, and heartaches.

That most of our failures are due to neglect of simple principles. We persist in the desire to get something for nothing, to make progress without paying in effort.

Fashions and Fads.

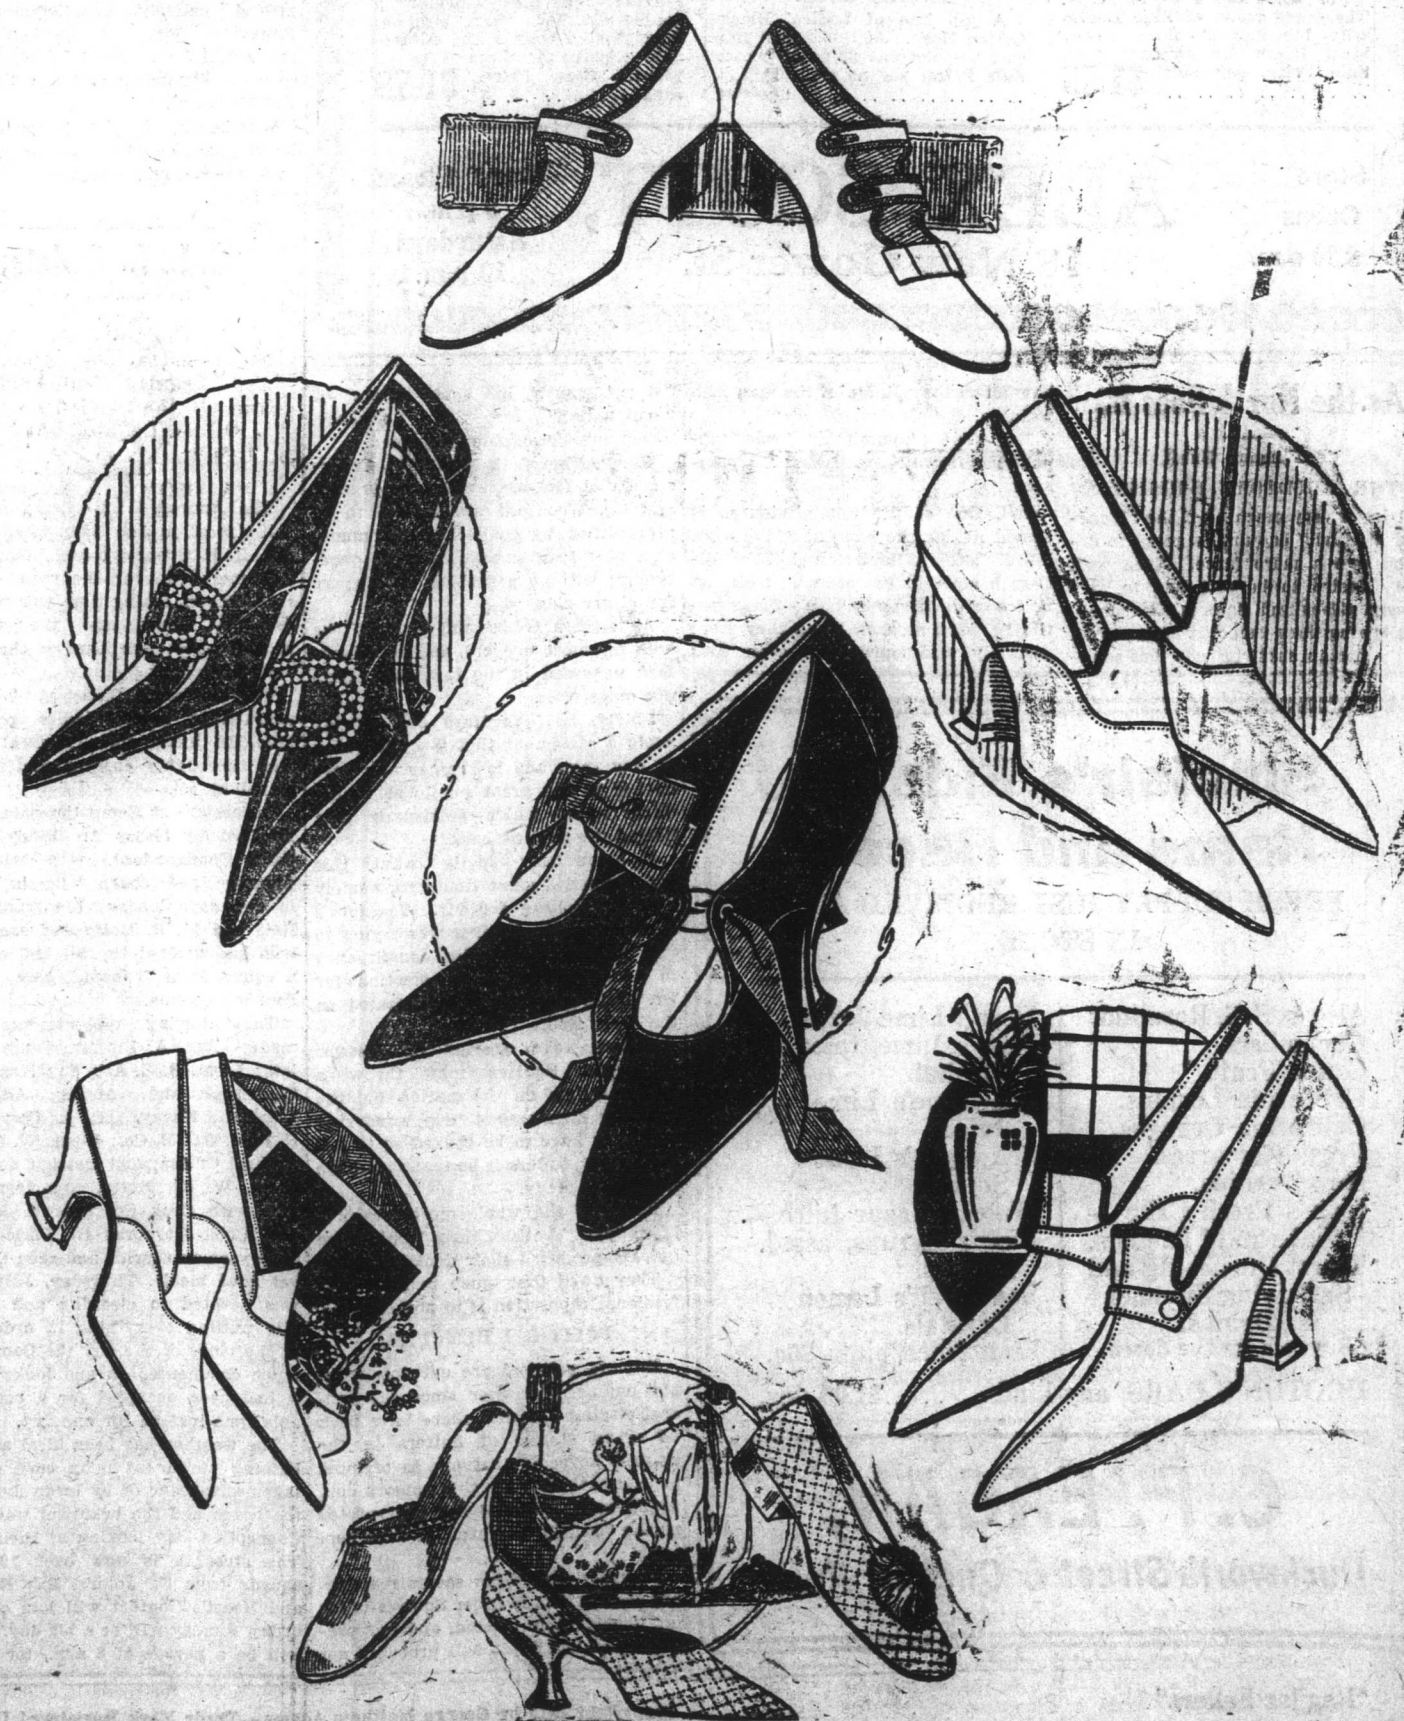

Reversible dolmans of mole are lined with brocade velvet.

Large hats of black velvet are being worn with the semi-evening costumes.

The long-waisted bodice of one dancing frock was entirely of taffeta roses.
