Pulling the World's Leg!

HOAXERS WHO HAVE DECEIVED CONTINENTS.

From time to time the whole world is stirred by some amazing item of news. It becomes the chief topic of conversation. Then, with startling suddenness, comes a bombshell. The story is a "fake." A clever schemer has hoaxed the world.

Something of the sort happened recently. One day it was announced that the "lost" books of Livy had been found. Livy was a famous Roman historian, and a certain part of his work has been missing for a thousand years. The news that this missing part had been found caused great excitement among learned men all over the world. Then the finder caused an additional sensation by disappearing. The frontiers were watched and the closest search was made for him. He reappeared, only to confess that his story was untrue. The world's "leg" had been "pulled."

A Water-Power "Wonder."

A few days later it was reported in London that King Boris of Bulgaria had been assassinated. Nothing definite could be learnt. All day long the telephone of the Bulgarian Legation rang. The greatest anxiety was felt. Then it was learnt that the king was alive and well. A Bulgarian newspaper had been hoaxed, and the story had been copied by newspapers all over the world.

Curiously enough, scientists and other intellectuals seem to be among the easiest to hoax. There is the instance of the "Keely motor." An inventor declared that he had discovered a new force, more powerful than any power then known. By means of this invention, he stated, a quart of water could be made to exert a force of one thousand horsepower. There was intense excitement over this announcement. Twenty thousand pounds was raised by a public fund; the inventor was hailed as the greatest inventor of the age.

The inventor produced a machine—a baffling tangle of pipes and tubes—and invited scientists to witness a test. Unfortunately for him he bungled the affair and was seen to slip in a reservoir of "compressed air"—the only power his "invention" possessed!

New Up The Wrong Boat.

Another hoax deceived scientists and some of the greatest naval experts. A certain "professor" stated that he had discovered a ray which could blow up ships that were lying five or more miles away. He gave a wonderful demonstration in the presence of well known people.

He had, of course, discovered no ray at all. The ships were exploded by a charge of dynamite placed on board, and ignited by an electric cable arranged by two accomplices. On one occasion of a second test something went wrong, and instead of the ship being blown up, the fate befell the boat containing the "professor's" assistants.

One of the most amazing hoaxes on record is that of the American explorer, Peary, who reported that he had found a channel at the north of Greenland. This was supposed to prove that Greenland was an island, and the channel was marked on American Navy maps. It was not until six years later that another explorer reported that where the channel was supposed to be he said there was a range of hills, free from ice and where game abounded.

The Crop That Failed.

Peary also claimed to have discovered a tract of land called Crocker Land. Subsequently, other explorers established the fact that no such land existed. Peary's discoveries have been deleted from the naval maps, and much doubt has, consequently, been cast upon his statement that he discovered the North Pole.

Some years ago a letter was received by an important newspaper declaring that the greatest sufferings were being experienced by the inhabitants of certain parts of Italy owing to the failure of the macaroni crop. An article was actually published on the subject and a relief fund suggested. Macaroni is not a plant, but an article manufactured from flour!

Ex-Postman's Record

QUARTER OF A MILLION MILES WALKED IN 41 YEARS.

Twenty miles a day for 41 years and eight months—excepting Sundays and annual holidays of a fortnight—making a total mileage of 250,000, is the walking record of Mr. William Plowman, formerly a Relgate postman, whose exploits in this respect rival those of Mr. James Drew, mentioned recently in the "News of the World." Mr. Plowman, who is now 58, holds an Imperial Service Medal and the Postmaster-General's certificate for over 41 years' service. His family has been connected with the Post Office for the past 65 years, his uncle entering the service in 1859. His son is now carrying on, having started three years ago. During Mr. Plowman's long service his work has often been of an arduous nature, for, in addition to the load of heavy mail bags and parcels, he often had to encounter very severe weather, particularly in the winters of the early eighties. He recalls that St. Valentine's Day used to be a very strenuous time for postmen, especially before Christmas cards came into general use, after which the custom of sending valentines gradually died out. Mr. Plowman, who retired two years ago on pension, has by no means stopped walking. In order to keep fit he very often tramps from his home at Relgate to Walton Heath, a distance of four miles, and carries clubs on the links of the Walton Heath Golf Club.

Germans do Not Generally Observe 8-Hour Day

HONOVER, Oct. 29 (A.P.)—The eight-hour day, while theoretically guaranteed by the new German constitution, is by no means generally observed among factory workers, according to an investigation just conducted by the Factory Workers' union. Of the 481 locals of the union, 320 turned in reports covering 4,860 concerns employing 481,449 persons.

The results show that only 54 per cent of the employees in the concerns investigated work up to 48 hours per week, while 5.8 per cent work from 48 to 51 hours, 26 per cent from 51 to 54 hours, and 15.9 per cent over 54 hours per week.

A man had several complaints made to him regarding his Irish servant, and took him to task.

The Will

There comes a time in the life of every man when he must leave his worldly possessions to the care of another. In anticipation of this, therefore, the first obligation resting on an individual who is possessed of property is the making of a will, and this should be done before the capacities become impaired by time or the ravages of disease.

Britain's Under-ground Wealth

Although the undeveloped underground wealth of such countries as China and Brazil, as well as many of our own overseas possessions is known to be enormous, there is no area in the world where such a wealth and variety of mineral and metal lies within workable reach as in this country.

It is estimated that up to the present year the mineral matter extracted from the United Kingdom amounts to the prodigious total of 460 tons for every acre of its extent. This works out to twelve thousand million tons, a figure which the human mind is incapable of grasping.

But we are faced with the further fact that there is no similar area in the world which has been more heavily and continuously worked, and this consideration has led many to regard Britain as a depleted country so far as mineral wealth is concerned.

Experts say, however, that the real mineral wealth of these islands has not yet been seriously impaired, and it is a fact that new lodges of great value and variety are constantly being traced. Moreover, with the immense improvements in machinery—with compressed air, hydraulics, and electricity as helpers—mines which seemed exhausted are again workable and the time will come when far greater depths will be explored.

Brooklyn School Girl

WATCHES WITHOUT MOAN SURGEONS REMOVE FOOT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4—Her left foot so crushed it had to be amputated, 13-year-old Fannie Loftman, of Brooklyn, lay pinned under a surface car for an hour without a whisper, although fully conscious.

While a wrecking crew, aided by firemen and ambulance surgeons, worked to extricate her, Fannie lay perfectly still, her eyes open and her gaze fixed on the workers.

"She is one of the bravest girls I have met in all my experience," said

Ambulance Surgeon Singer and at Bushwick Hospital his sentiment was echoed by other doctors.

Fannie was on her way to high school. She got off a car, walked behind it and was run down by another car going in the opposite direction. Her left leg was caught in the front truck and she was pinned underneath the car.

At the hospital it was said after the amputation that her condition was "very encouraging."

Feeding the Zoo

Wild animals in captivity are notoriously capricious about their food. Their temperamental appetites must be catered to like a spoiled child. Ever since the establishment of the Bronx Zoological park the kitchen for the animals' food has been presided over by Rudolph H. Bell, and the fact that the "guests" are usually in the pink of condition speaks well for the tact and patience of their head cook. Practically every kind of food is needed for the many different kinds of animals, reptiles and birds. The monkeys are the most difficult to please. They demand variety and are easily peevish if things do not suit. Their diet includes about everything humans demand except meat and fish.
