

He and She.

"Oh, but what a cozy room!" He had halted just inside the door and was looking around.

"Does it look so? I tried as much as I could to make it like my old home. A few friends bought in some of the furniture for me, and when I was really settled it was sent up. Lodging house rooms are so very dreary."

His answer was a half-smile. In that moment he had compared the black horse-hair covered chairs and sofa of Miss Bates' drawing-room—the rigid back of each one protected by a wool anti-fur-casual—the homely elegance which reigned here.

"As you see," she said, pointing to the table, "I was just making myself a cup of tea. Now won't you sit down and join me? That would be showing yourself neighborly."

"I think I have had my tea."

"Think only?"

"Well, I know my landlady brought it to me, because it was then she spoke of having seen the doctor here, and I at once jumped at the conclusion that you were ill, because for a week past I have never caught sight of you at the window."

"And I have never seen you."

"No, we don't see unless we look."

"But I have looked."

"Not from where you usually stand, or I must have seen you. I began to feel a little huffy. I thought, 'She never looks at me, I presume on that little chat we had together.'"

"Why, of course not. How could I? I was only afraid I might have let my tongue run away with me."

"Come, come!" he said, smiling. "It has taken us ten years to break the ice. It must not take us ten more before we are friends."

While he spoke his eyes were fixed on her—watching her measure out the tea, pour the water from the kettle. He did not offer to help her; the sight of a woman doing these trifling acts brought to him a pleasant sense of home.

"You are looking very tired," he said as she sat down waiting for the tea to draw.

"That is partly because I was up all night, and then during the day I have felt rather anxious about her employment and some other things."

"Oh, don't worry about that. They'll get on all right without you."

"Yes, I know they will; but I don't want them to find that out. There are so many women wanting employment and some know French and German, which I don't and others have a home with their parents, and could take a smaller salary. Oh, it does not do to stop away! When I found that poor thing going, I thought, 'I should have thought—supposing this was my case, what would become of me? It isn't death I fear—sickness or later that comes to all—but old age, sickness, and a lonely life.'"

"Then you have nothing put by?"

"A few pounds only. How could I? I get 30 shillings a week. That is not quite £30 a year."

"And you manage to live here on that?"

"I pay my way. Why? Does that sound to you very little?"

"Very little."

"I suppose they do pay men better, and it's well they do, for you want me to do, and you are not able to manage as well."

"I am in a fire-insurance society," he said. "The salaries there vary from one to three hundred. When I had £200 it did not matter to me. My mother was living then, and in addition to a pension, she had a little put away, which at her death came to me."

"I am glad you need not be troubled with my anxiety."

"No, and yet I have as great a dread of sickness and of old age. Each year I live the sense of my loneliness more oppresses me."

"I know. Why, I can't tell you the pleasure it gives me to have somebody drinking tea with me, to be able to speak of things we feel—things that give one sorrow or joy. The men at the office are all good fellows, and very kind to me, but I should never dream of talking to them as I have to you. They would not understand! I might as well speak in Chinese!"

He did not answer in words, but he gave her a nod of sympathy, and stooped down to stroke the cat.

"Now, Totty, get up and be friendly to Mr. Sargent."

"That reminds me," he said, "we have not exchanged names, yet. My name is Robert Morley."

"And mine is Elizabeth Davidson."

"Elizabeth?" he repeated softly. "My mother was called Elizabeth. I found that out when I was a child. Robert is a very dear name to me. He had such a sweet, generous nature. When I think of his trust I feel ashamed of my despondency. Not that I am a despondent. My disposition is buoyant. I am very much like a cork—if I go under water one minute, the next, up I bob again."

"You always struck me as being very cheerful."

"What! Did I seem cheerful from the way? Dear me! How little the tiniest bit of interest in me. I am so glad I know now—so glad that we have spoken to each other, and that we are friends."

He had risen from his chair and seemed suddenly about to go. She, a little embarrassed that he had not responded, added, "At least that is my feeling towards you."

"Is it?" he said, smiling. "I forgot it was so late. I really must go. Good-bye."

And before she had recovered from her surprise he was gone.

A wave of hot color went over her. What did it mean? What did he know? She, at her age no one could misunderstand her! The tears sprang to her eyes and fell in a quiet shower. The door being opened made her look up. It was he back again.

"When I got into the street I found I had left my hat behind," he was saying; and she making an effort at regaining her self-possession, answered, "Oh, what a pity! Did you?"

This brought him into the room, and near to her. "Why are you crying?" he exclaimed.

"No, no, no," she forced herself to smile.

"But you are. Your face is wet; your eyes are full of tears. What is the matter? Have I offended you?"

"No, but I thought that perhaps I had offended you. What is the matter? I had intended to go to bed, but I was so tired, but please take no notice. Woman's tears come very readily. It must be feeling so tired that makes me so silly."

He stood for a moment irresolute, turned towards the door, came back, and standing in front of her said, "Silly! If you think yourself silly, what will you say to me? You were surprised to see me go. It was because I feared you would think I had taken leave of my senses if I stayed."

"Why?"

"Why? Because all at once the truth flashed upon me. Suddenly, I knew why I had felt so angry because I had not seen you at your window; why I was so anxious when I thought you were ill; what made me come over to find out the truth about you; the reason that seeing you were here made me reject and feel happy. It is that I love you. Oh, it has not come now, for years it has been growing upon me, only I did not know it. And now it has come to this. Will you marry me? I must know."

But I feel sure you are making a mistake. I have been talking to you and you feel sorry for me. No, no; forget what you have said. In the morning everything will look different to you. Pity is not love.

"But it is akin to it. If I give you love can you not give me pity?"

"I pity you! Why, you have brought all the sunlight I have known for years to me. When you spoke to me on that omnibus I could have hugged you."

"Hug me now," he said—for the temerity of a quiet man is remarkable—and he took her hands and placed them on his shoulders, and looking at her, continued, "We are two very lonely beings; a kindly providence, as it seems to me, has brought us together. Can you trust yourself to me? I would strive to make you happy."

The tried to speak, tried to force back her tears, but the happy flow would come. "It is because I am so happy," she said, "for I must tell you that often and often, years ago, when I felt so lonely, I have drawn aside my blind and looked over at your window, and I have seen you sitting there alone. I have said, 'Why couldn't it be that we took a fancy to each other? He looks so nice and kind, but if he married it would be to a young girl; not to me.'"

"I—I am 38."

"And I am 45. We have no time to lose, you see. Already we have wasted ten years. I shall put up the blinds immediately. You must give me your name and address, and I will tell them at mine that I want my holiday."

"It must be a dream," she put up her hands and pushed back her hair. "I cannot believe it. Of late I have felt quite frightened thinking how sad it would be if you were away."

"A similar dream has haunted me especially to-day, when I saw the blind down. I thought, 'She is here, and I have been waiting for her to come. I will go down to Putney. The old house I lived in from a boy is there, and it is vacant too, and we will make it our home, and as before, the dear name of its mistress will be Elizabeth Morley.'"

ANNUAL MEETING

Of the East Middlesex Agricultural Society.

Presentation of Reports and Election of Officers.

The annual meeting of the East Middlesex Agricultural Society was held yesterday afternoon in the interim sessions room. The attendance was large and the room was crowded to the doors.

Mr. Charles Trebilcock, president, occupied the chair. He returned thanks to the members for the honor conferred on him. He then called on Mr. Ironsides for the FINANCIAL STATEMENT, 1894.

Receipts—
Paid to townships societies (share of grant).....$127 60
Legislative grant.....800 00
Interest on deposit.....5 03
Total.....$932 63

Disbursements—
Paid to townships societies (share of grant).....$120 00
Western Fair Association.....378 62
Salaries and auditors' fees.....121 00
Printing and advertising.....8 43
Total.....$628 05

The statement was audited and found correct.

Mr. A. R. Rowat, secretary, presented the annual report in which it was stated that during the past year there had been many things discouraging to the farmer. Continued heavy rains in May and June flooded the low and level land, then followed nearly three months drought, and a grasshopper pest, tending to shorten the growing crops. Fall wheat was, on the whole, very good. Plentiful warm fall rains and very little frost gave a great growth to the fall grass and root crops, and the so far mild winter had been a great saving of winter fodder. The greatest drawback was the very low price of grain, live stock and meats of all kinds. Cheese was about the only thing that held its own price, while pork had been very disappointing. With reference to the Western Fair, it was said that the exhibit of live stock in 1894 had exceeded that of 1893 in number, and in quality it was far more important than the agricultural hall. The report continued to criticize the various exhibits. It had been said by many that the Western Fair was not as good as it used to be. But in taking a survey of the whole there was very little difference from days gone by. There was one thing they took pleasure in saying, that there was no fair grounds in the Dominion of Canada for fair purposes than Queen's Park. (Applause.)

The election of officers was then proceeded with and resulted as follows:

President—John Kennedy.
First Vice-President—Charles Trebilcock.
Second Vice-President—Dan McKenzie.
Directors—London township, George Scott; Westminster, Allan Bogue, William Jackson and John Laidlaw; Dorchester, Richard Venning and Arch Rowat; West Nisour, Dr. R. Ardiel and Westworth McKellin; London West, Wm. Moore.

Western Fair Directors—John Kennedy, Charles Trebilcock, Dan McKenzie, Allan Bogue, Wm. Jackson and Wm. Moore.
Western Fair Association Representatives—George Scott, Arch Rowat and Richard Ardiel.

The various officers returned thanks for their election and the meeting then adjourned.

STRATHROY.

Jan. 15.—The I. O. O. F. Band with a few invited guests, had a very pleasant supper together at the Commercial Hotel on Monday evening.

Special services are being held in the Baptist Church for the last ten days, and will be continued all this week. The attendance and interest are good, and it is hoped that there will be much spiritual benefit.

The fall of snow and the splendid sleighing are making business lively, and pleasure-travelers as well as cutter-makers are delighted.

Mr. D. A. Galbraith, who was afflicted with smallpox two months ago, has been visiting friends in town this week.

Mrs. (Rev.) W. G. Jordan, who was badly hurt by a fall on the sidewalk, is slowly recovering.

Mr. L. M. De Gex, of the Bank of Commerce, who was very ill with pleurisy, is now convalescent.

Mr. James Drewe, of English street, janitor of St. John's Church, has been very ill for some weeks, and is yet in a critical condition.

Mr. J. H. Aiken lectured on his experience in South Africa on Friday evening last in the Methodist Church, Front street. The attendance was large, and the lecture was so highly appreciated that Mr. Aiken repeated it in the same place on Saturday evening.

The annual meeting of the West Middlesex Agricultural Society was held here to-day. The annual report showed a very prosperous year. The Fall Show had been a great success, and entries were ahead of any previous year. In three years over and above all ordinary expenditure $1,020 had been expended on permanent improvements and nearly $1,000 applied to the reduction of the debt. The union of the Lobe and Adelaide Agricultural and Strathroy Agricultural Societies had been found very advantageous, and had contributed much to the success achieved.

The annual meeting of the South Oxford Reform Association will be held at Mount Eglin on Monday afternoon, Jan. 28, at 1 o'clock.

The anniversary services of St. Andrew's Church, Verashoville, will be held on Sunday, Jan. 27, and on the Monday following the annual tea-meeting will be held. St. Paul's choir, Ingersoll, has been invited to furnish the music for Monday evening.

Rev. J. H. Hazwood is still at Clifford, where his mother and brother are trying dangerously ill. His pulpit on Sunday last was occupied in the morning by Rev. Dr. Dempsey, and in the evening by Mr. Joseph Gibson.

Rev. E. R. Hutt was in Dutton on Sunday last preaching anniversary sermons in the Presbyterian Church there. Rev. Mr. Wilson, of that town, occupied St. Paul's pulpit, preaching two eloquent and impressive discourses.

The Missionary Circle of the Order of King's Daughters will give a unique entertainment in the town hall on Tuesday evening, Jan. 28. It is what might be called a burlesque, entitled "The District School." A large number of our citizens are taking part in it, and the public will no doubt be offered an evening of rare enjoyment.

The ladies of St. Paul's Church will meet on Friday afternoon for the purpose of devising ways and means to aid in the church's work.

The local union of Christian Endeavor will hold its quarterly meeting in St. Paul's Church next Monday evening. The address of the evening will be delivered by Rev. Canon Richardson, of London. An interesting and profitable meeting may be looked for.

The Cosgrove family will give an entertainment in the town hall on Thursday evening, Jan. 24, under the auspices of the A. O. F. Band.

The next meeting of the old council will be held on Monday morning next at 10 o'clock. The new council will meet for organization at 11 o'clock the same day.

The ice harvest is now in full blast, and an excellent quality of this necessary article is being secured.

Messrs. Robertson & McKay's new store is being rapidly pushed to completion, and when ready for occupation will be one of the handsomest in town. It is being specially fitted up for the requirements of the hardware trade.

Mr. Fred Richardson, of Chicago, is visiting friends in town.

Religious services are now being held in the Charles Street Methodist Church.

MIDDLESEX.

A very successful concert was held in the Masonic Hall, Lambeth, Monday night, under the auspices of Court Lambeth, No. 143, I. O. F. The hall was packed. All who were engaged as entertainers were present, namely: Miss Holding, Brantford; Mr. Amonte, Tilsonburg; Mr. Sim Fax, London, and the McLaren brothers, of Byron, with Miss Poole as accompanist. All performed their parts with the greatest success, and all went away satisfied and more than ever impressed with the idea that whatever Court Lambeth undertake they make a success.
