

den of routine professorial duties he would have regained his health and vigor after his prolonged illness and serious operation and that he would be spared for many years to continue his studies upon those special branches of physiology and medicine in which he was so much interested and which he had made so particularly his own."

---