

Such a study of the Bible meant work. He warned those now going out against the tendency to mysticism which was abroad. They must use means if they are to attain to any definite end. They were now entering upon one of the hardest professions a man could undertake. If they were content to sit idly down and yield to mysticism they would inevitably fail; if, on the other hand, they were resolved in the strength of God to go manfully forward, they must succeed. The speaker closed with an earnest appeal to the members of the class to be faithful in the work they had undertaken, and with the most sincere wishes for their prosperity and usefulness.

The meeting throughout was a most enjoyable one, a fitting close to one of the pleasantest of the closing days of Knox College.
