

of the life of the rude fisherfolk of that bleak land, sympathetically treated and strongly convincing.

Another interesting book of this season's list, which should prove popular this Christmas, is "Dentzens of the Deep," by F. T. Bullen. Mr. Bullen has done for the dwellers of the sea what others have done for the frequenters of the jungle and forest, a fascinating volume which owes nothing of its success to its precursors. The value of the book lies in its truth, its charm and its lively sympathy with every living thing.

For the older people, two little books by S. D. Gordon should come in appropriately. They are entitled "Quiet Talks on Power" and "Quiet Talks on Prayer," and have been enormously successful, reaching a sale of 50,000 copies in England. The Canadian edition is meeting with a hearty reception from the trade.

MORANG & CO., LIMITED.

Three of the most important works of fiction of the year bear the Morang imprint. They are Rudyard Kipling's "Trallies and Discoveries," Hall Caine's "The Prodigal Son," and Jack London's "The Sea Wolf." Of scarcely less interest are "The Mountains," by Stewart Edward White, "Monarch, the Big Bear," by Ernest Thompson Seton, "The Mastery," by Mark Lee Luther, "Blazed Trail Stories," by Stewart Edward White, "Sabrina Warham," by Laurence Housman, "Falaïse of the Blessed Voice," by William Stearns Davis, and "The Common-Loi," by Robert Herrick. All these novels have been most carefully selected by the publishers and are issued in most attractive guise.

But Morang & Co., Limited, while well and favorably known for their excellent choice of current fiction, are doing a great work for Canada in publishing works of history and biography peculiarly Canadian. The "Makers of Canada" series, on which Mr. Morang has lavished great personal care, are deserving of the best attention of every true Canadian. The series is yet but in its infancy, but judging from the character of the volumes already issued, it will eventually take its place as one of the most notable publishing ventures of the time. A word of praise must be bestowed on the printing and binding of the series, which reflect great credit on the Canadian printing industry. These lives of men like Joseph Howe, Egerton Ryerson, Sir John Beverley Robinson, and the late G. M. Grant, should prove to be splendid gift books for the holiday season. For children, Morang & Co., Limited, have made excellent provision with their "Red Cap Tales," by S. R. Crockett; "The
