As specimens, taken at hazard, we subjoin two brief passages:

RELIGION IN SMALL THINGS.

The excellent Bishop Wilson has said, speaking of small instances of self-denial, "Say not, it is a trifle, and not fit to offer in sacrifice to God." And the same may be said of small occasions of nourishing the remembrance of him; of short prayers frequently through the day, of bowing the body at the sacred name of Jesus, of turning every event and accident of life, not openly, but as much as may be in secret, into an opportunity for devout prayer and recollection, "whose we are and whom we serve;" where we are now, and whither we are fast going. Life is made up of such little things as these, and if these be Life is made up of such little things as these, and if these be regularly offered to Almighty God, in the name of His Son Jesus Christ, then the whole of life is offered to him; and no doubt he will bless the sacrifice, he will not despise the day of small things. He who gave an everlasting reward to the poor widow with her two mites, will look down graciously on the least and lowest offering, which the least and lowest of his people may humbly present to him; he will bless the willing mind, and fill it more and more with the spirit of his holy fear, that it may continue his for ever.

HOW THE KING [OR QUEEN] IS TO BE HONOURED.

PENETANGUISHINE. (From a Lay Correspondent.)—I am happy to inform you that on the 24th July the Lord Bishop of Toronto consecrated our Church, and that his Lordship was pleased to express that he was much gratified with all that has been done.

mour the king: we must honour him, not merely as one in high authority, as one who keeps together the whole state, and is therefore most useful and necessary for keeping up that quiet and peaceable life, which all men, and especially all Christians, naturally desire; but we must honour the king apart from all use to ourselves, because he is the Anointed of the Lord, a living type, if I may so speak, of the supreme dominion of Jesus Christ, as bishops are living types of his priestly and pastoral care: we must be loyal, self-denying servants of his majesty, not merely cool calculators how much more would be lost than gained, in the end, by any kind of rebellion. It is but an old, worn-out heathen notion, lately taken up by some moderns, that the great thing is love of one's country; and that if a man be full of that, heathen notion, lately taken up by some moderns, that the great thing is love of one's country; and that if a man be full of that, it matters little whether he respect his king or no. The Bible, holds a very different language: it says, throughout, This is God's anointed, therefore he must be feared and honoured; Cod has made him the image of his majesty, has commanded us to pay tribute to him; let us perform that duty cheerfully. Rev. Dr. Bathune for the benefit of the society.—Moniform for the benefit of the society for the benefit of the society.—Moniform for the benefit of the society.—Moniform for the benefit of the society for the benefit of the society for the benefit of the society of Lord and not to man; and let us pay it scrupulously too, never doing anything to encourage the miserable and lawless ways of defrauding the revenue, which I fear are still too common, even among decent people. Much, very much, might be said of such proceedings, and of their evil and bitter fruits: but surely to a Christian this one thing should be sufficient, that to uphold them is utterly contradicting our prayers for the king. The type, used by the American publishers, is clear and legible, and the two volumes present altogether a

This is a complete edition, containing all the passages omitted in former impressions of the work. No one can be said to be acquainted with English History, who has not bestowed many hours upon this full and melancholy record of a turbulent and disloyal period, when every principle that can actuate a politician was called into vigorous existence, and embodied itself, on the one hand, in a Strafford, a Falkland, a Hyde, a Laud,—and, on the other in a Cromwell a Vane, a Hampden, and a Pym. other, in a Cromwell, a Vane, a Hampden, and a Pym.

The next important alteration required, is a return to the appointment of a Board of Education for each district, by the the West End. We hope in a week or two to furnish particulars. Man is said to be an "imitative animal." There is in some gloomy mortals a morbid tendency to dismal mimicry, which, when any startling act has thrilled the public mind labours to produce a sort of copy of it. When the late Lord Castlereagh temping of the product of the produc terminated his existance, several cases of suicide, apparently studied imitations of his fearful deed, immediately followed.—

moved to deal lightly with the lives of others, but even to sport with the idea of laying down their own. How to combat such miserable aberrations it is not easy to decide. What is called "the last severity of the law," if justifiable, seems hardly "the last severity of the law," if justifiable, seems hardly appropriate—hardly likely to prove efficient to put down the evil. A punishment will not check the current of brutal extravagance, what will? To meet it with argument would be to reason with the storm.

The Governors of Bethlem Hospital have very properly taken The Governors of Bethlem Hospital have very properly taken steps to undeceive those who were carried away by a report-that Steps to undeceive those who were carried away by a report-that Oxford was so well done by in the place of his confinement, that it might seem an eligible speculation for any person in bad that it might seem an eligible speculation for any person in bad circumstances to qualify himself, by assailing Royalty, for apartments in the same noble asylum. Though a wretched fellow-creature, labouring under a distressing malady, is not subjected to miserable torture, there is nothing so tempting in subjected to miserable torture, there is nothing so tempting in the life Oxford is permitted to lead, and the unending incarce-ration before him, as to make the poorest man content, in order ration before him, as to make the poorest man content, in order to escape want, to be subjected to the same treatment. The Governors acted wisely in taking care that this should be known. Not less useful may it prove to explain what will be known. Not less useful may it prove to expend the condition of John Francis, exempted, as he has been, from the condition of John Francis, exempted, as he has been, from the last penalty of the law.

There was a time when many of the convicts sent to New South Wales found opportunities of making themselves valuable to a rising society, and in consequence obtained distinction, and in some cases large fortunes. Besides Terry and others who have been named as having amassed wealth, in many instances by means hardly more creditable than the acts which caused them to find themselves in that part of the world, there were some who by a blameless exercise of ingenuity, grew rich. A nerson to find themselves in that part of the world, there were some who by a blameless exercise of ingenuity, grew rich. A person named Grove was transported for seven years, for some not very aggravated offence. When he arrived out he established a disaggravated offence, when he arrived out he established a distillery on a new, or an improved plan, and his success was such that he rose to affluence, and may now claim houses, lands, and ships of his own! The numerous emigrations of free settlers have, of late years, greatly narrowed the chances of the convicts, under the most favourable circumstances. It is now become under the most favourable circumstances. It is now becoming pretty generally known, among that class to whom the knowledge is most important, that transportation is no longer a joke, or even a moderate evil. In every imaginable case the expatriated convict has much to endure; but dreadful is the lot of those who are sent to the penal settlements, places generally reserved for offenders hardened in crime, whom all moderate inflictions have failed to subdue.

The Committee of the House of Commons, which sat in 1838 reported that "the condition of convicts in these settlements had been shown to be one of unmitigated wretchedness," and the slightest offence. There have been cases in which the convict appears to have committed a new trime, in the hope that the hand of justice would terminate his deplorable existence. Dr. Ullathorne, a Roman Catholic priest, gave evidence to this treet. In 1834, he said, in Norfolk Island, to which place John

Eight long years must pass before any material relief will be afforded, and when penitence has earned some moderate amelioration, the criminal must still remain, till the close of life, a despised exile, far from his home, his relatives, and all who would look upon him with stretched on the back of a turn down chair, each rehearsed the seene he was to perform in a day or two beneath the fatal axe! Seene he was to perform in a day or two beneath the fatal axe! These instances will suffice to show that excited minds, where insanity has never been suspected, may not only be moved to deal lightly with the lives of others, but even to sport with the idea of laying down their own. How to combat such house of Ferrie, Kerr, and others, have kept pace with the com-mercial growth of the place, all reaping an abundant harvest. Nothing can tend more to create feelings of gratification than a stroll from East to West of King Street during the busy hours of the day. On entering from the East, the traveller will behold, in addition to the princely establishment of Buchanan & Co., already named, a handsome block of brick houses rapidly replacing the "wooden walls" consigned to "the tomb of all the Capulets" by the raging element of Fire. Crossing John Street, he will enter upon what is termed "Stinson's Block," a handsome row of edifices devoted to various trades, and all apparently in a good way of business. Juson's elegant Hardware Store will also strike his eye, where articles of the trade may be purchased on as good terms as in Montreal.—

Proceeding West, he will arrive at the corner of James Street
(Macnab's corner as it has heretofore been called,) where a row of elegant buildings, not excelled by those termed "Wellington" in Toronto, will meet his view. The walk may be extended as far westward as the Gore Bank, and still, right and left, will business, business, business, be observed. Commanding a view of the whole street, may be seen the handsome three story Dry Goods and Groceries Stores of Messrs. Osborne & McIntyre, by the side of which are erecting several others to & McIntyre, by the side of which are erecting several others to be devoted to like purposes. Retracing his steps, and extending his observation to the southward side of King Street, our traveller will behold the extensive premises of Mr. McLaren, adjacent to the commodious Hotel of Mr. Press, (late Burley's,) and throughout the street, on this, the southward side, he cannot fail to the application of goods of starling and fail to admire the exhibition of goods, of sterling value, and of very description, which will attract his attention at every step. Here may be seen the new importations in China, Glass, Crockery, of Mr. Bigelow: there are the "latest fashions" of Messrs. Walker & Watson, Bryce & Mc Murrich, Ross & Kentedy, Kirkland, Price & Co., Davidson & Inman, cum multis alis; nor can the intellectual treat to be obtained at Armour's De passed over without comment, since this establishment pro es to be both an ornament and a solid acquisition to the town. The Traveller again crosses John Street, and pauses, ere he crosses to the comfortable Hotel of Mr. Devereux (where he haply ses to the comfortable Hotel of Mr. Devereux (where he haply sojourns,) to witness the metamorphosis which Young's corner has undergone. Here are no longer to be seen the elegant draperies or sweetened comforts of its late proprietor; but, not less usefully, this capacious and elegant store is now fitted up with an excellent stock of Shelf and Heavy Hardware, in quantity an excellent stock of Shelf and Heavy Hardware, in quantity and quality sufficient for the purposes of all from here to Sandwich. Dr. Ullathorne and a Protestant clergyman were sent to attend those who were to suffer. On his arrival at the island, though it was late at night, as those who were to be executed had but five days to live, he went to the prison, and there he witnessed such a scene, he says, as he never prison, and there he witnessed such a scene, he says, as he never in three cells, and on his proceeding to announce the names of those who were selected to suffer, the effect of his speech was those who were selected to suffer, the effect of his speech was the mentioned the individuals who were to be put to death, one after another dropped on his knees and thanked God that he af was to be delivered from that horrible place, while those whose lives were spared stood mute and weeping in profound dismay.

This gentleman added it was very common for culprits, on their way to the scaffold, to express joy that they were not going to Norfolk Island; and another Roman Catholic minister, who had attended seventy-four executions, declared that the greater number of those he had attended in their last moments.

N.B.—The Summer Vacation will terminate on Wednesday, the A. 3.—The examination of the Home District Grammar School, which took place on Tuesday and Wednesday, last week, was an exhibition highly honourable to Mr. Crombie's diligence and talents as a teacher.—It was manifest that his pupils must have been put under a very laborious training, laborious on the part of the teacher, but admirably calculated to impress elementary instruction on the minds of the young. Certainly, it is searcely possible that a pupil, having once been thoroughly grounded in any department of education in this manner, should not be able to advance in it afterwards with great facility and success:

At Vienna, township of Bayham, on Monday, the 8th instant, Mrs. Mary B. Tims, a native of England, aged 58 years; a sincere and zealous member of the Church. In her life and conversation, it cut be truly said, that she "adorned the detrine of the Lord Jesuis in all things." In her relative duties of wife and mother, she obtained the respect and admiration of her acquaintance, who, with her husband and a numerous family, deplore her loss. Her hopes being in heaven, her conversation was there also,—that Saviour whom she served in life was her hope in theath. A ther request, the Rev. F. Evans, Rector of Woodhouse, preached a funeral sermon, and ably illustrated the beauties of the Church, and the scriptural hopes of its members, from a text of her own selection for that purpose:—

"Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," &c. &c. &c. Matth. xi. 28, 29, 30.
