THE CASE ENDED.

As was corroborated by George Dickey the bar-tender, and his brother, Matt. Dickey. The bress buttons were noticeable they said, and very bright.

Hugh G.eason, bartender for Matt. Danahey, in whose saloon Danabey swore that Martin Bourks was during the whole of the evening of May 4:h. to:k the stand and swore that he (the witnes-) was not in the saloon that night between 6 30 and 11 o'clock. Witness Carberry in the morning had sworn that Glesson was in the sal on between 6 30 and 8 30 on that night.

The State then sprung a sensation that had come into its possession in the morning by showing by Officer Flynn that when Dan Coughlin was arrested two knives were found on the suspect, and the knives belonged to Dr.

To identify the knives, Mr. F. T. Conklin took the stand and swore that they were identi-cal in every detail with two knives carried by the witness for two years and given by him to the doctor shortly before the murder. He was not positive that they were the same, but he be-lieved them to be so. The testimony created a decided stir in the room Dan Coughlin looked steadily at the ceiling and traed hard to assume indifference, but the nervous twitching of his eyelids told a tale of anything but composure. The netence will put in rebuttal evidence tomorrow.

Livery-stablekeeper Olsen, recalled, swore tha: Swanson were no livery on May 4th, that there was none in the stable for him to wear and until May 10th or 13th there never had been. He added that Swanson was a mau of strict sobriety and had been since he knew

The driver himself came next and in his blunt, honest way, so strongly noticed in the rebutial, corroborated the testimony of Olsen, and declared that no one drove his carriage on May 4th but himself and that no one were his clothes. The livery purchased a week after the munder was then produced. There was not a brass-button on it, black cloth buttons only, which had been on it since its purchase. This was the end of the State's case.

The tables were immediately shoved back and a space of comforcable dimensions made in front of the jury. This done the States Attoney began his speech.

He spoke in a plain conversational manner emphasised at times by a little feeling, but with no attempt at oratory. He said he would not enter into the arguments in his address; that he would leave that with his associates, contenting himself with simply reviewing the evidence. The murder of Dr. Cronin, he said, was one of the foulest in the annals of crime, and was the work of a company. To form a ground work for his proof, be told of Dr. Cronin having been a member of the committee that had tried the triangle, the report of which was read in the camp. The States Attorney read the testimony at which Dan Coughlin called for a secret committee to investigate the reading of the report At the time the secret committee was called for Beggs, Coughlin and Burke were present.
Touching on Kunze's connection with the conspiracy, the States Attorney said it did matter whether a member entered it before or after the murder, he was equally guilty. He then read the correspondence between Beggs and District Officer Spellman. After which the court adjourned all morning.

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 30.-Judge Longenecker resumed his address to the jury in the Cronin case this morning. He took up the incidents of the meeting of the Claness Gael camps at the reunion February 22, and reviewed the remarks made at that meeting by Pat. McGarry, to show that the members of the Clan were at this time discussing in bitter terms the very faces which Mr. Beggs pretended to deny. Referring to Pat. McGarry's speech, the States Attorney said McGarry had attacked the triangle in the name of the Clan na Gael. He had said that the triangle had embezzled the funds of the organization and had betrayed Irishmen to the prisons of the enemy scross the water. He said there were worse men than Le Caron yet in the organization. The man who gave Le Caron his credentials was worse than Le Caron.

The State Attorney spent some time in showing the motive that actuated the conspirators to commit the crime, and told again how the murdered physician had openly charged the triangle with misappropriating the funds of the order, and, for the purpose of covering the theft of the triangle, claiming the deficiency had been expended in dangerous work abroad, when, on the contrary, the money had gone no further than the pockets of the trianglers, and the dupes who had been sent abroad had been delivered to the English Government and were now languishing in foreign juls. After touching again on the appointment of the sacret committee, which Beggs had subsequently informed the camp would report to him alone, the States Atturney read the law of conspiracy and then took up the purchasing of the furniture and the leasing of the first at 117 Clark street, and of Kunzy being had been sent abroad had been delivered to the the flat at 117 Clark street, and of Kunzu being seen there by the witness James.

The leasing of the Carlson cottage next claimed attention. "Why," the States Absorney cried, pointing to Burke, "why, if Burke rented that cottage for himself and sister, did he use the name of Williams?" The speaker could find no answer that showed a legitimate use. He then referred to Kunze having belowd Burke to carry the furniture into the house. Kunze here shouted "That's a lie."

Judge Longenecker followed the course of the conspiracy step by step, picking up each thread, unravelling it with skill, and then wound it about the five suspects. Why was the Carlson cottage rented?" he demanded. "Because," he answered, "because it was known that the Carlsons were in and even should they hear they were of unsuspecting natures and would my no attention to it. And how did the murderers know this, evidence by revealing the criminal character of Sampson. The speaker continued, "of course, his character was of color. Had it not been, would Coughlin have believed Sampson capable of "doing up" the doctor. Is it likely Coughlin wanted the descon of a church or a reputable man to do his diray work. Hadde Defeated man to do his dir'y work. Hardly. Referring to the order were trained, the patriots of the charge of the country persons, many of port demand.

tage. In the catch basin, in which was the body, was found cots n, and cotton was in the truck. In the truck there were hair and bleed, and expert evidence has shown that the blood and expert evidence has shown that the blood and hair were from a human body. A man was put on the stand who swore that he could not tell numan blood and hair from any other. Do you, I ask, do you believe that the blood and hair were from a dog or a Guinea pig, or any living thing except a human being? The hair and blood belonged to Dr. Cronin.

You certainly do not believe that any dog or lower animal was killed in the cottage. Had such been so, why was the floor painted to cover up the blood of a dog or animal? I shall not take up your time to argue such a theory.

Now what of the men who did this dead?

Now what of the men who did this deed? We find that Beggs was busy telling men that Oronin was all right and would shortly return. I have no doubt that Begge firmly believed the body would never be discovered. The States Attorney then showed the intimacy that existed between Coughlin and Kunze. The latter, he continued, was a painter, and it was a painter who painted the floor of the cottage. Kunze is an artist, and while the thunders roared on Sunday night, May 12th, after it was found that the Carlsons would not rent the cottage to them any longer. Kunze put the artist's touch upon the blood. It stormed terribly that night, and I don't wonder that Kunze made a bungling job of it. Shortly thereafter Kunze moved and changed his name.

Now as to Coughlin, he said, the horse was driven by Smith. He told Dinan to say nothing about the hiring of the white horse, because it might get him into trouble, and yet later Coughlin told Captain Schaack that he saw Smith after May 4 but did not bring him in despits.

There is no improvement in the market here, alls being slow at about last week's rates. THE POCKETKNIVES FOUND ON COUGHLIN.

Chicago, Ills., Dec. 2.—When Judge McConnell's Court opened this morning in the Cronin case Mr. Forcest proceeded to offer evidence contradictory of the testimony of Conklin regarding the knives, said to be Cronin's, which were found in Dan Coughlin's possession.

August Loewenstein, a tailor on Clark street, near Washington, testified that on April 27th Dan Coughlin bought a pair of trousers at his place, they were not a good fit and one of his men altered them. Coughlin waited in the store for them and then put them on. And changing his trousers the ex detective took all the articles he had carried in the old trousers pockets and transferred them to the new garment. Among them were two knives. Witness was shown the knives put in evidence Friday and declared them to be exactly like those he saw that day. He noticed them particularly in him take one and he would not. Witness said to the best of his judgment they were the same knives.

On the cross-examination witness insisted that the date was April 27th. Coughlin's name was not on the books because it was a cash traus-

Ex-Detective Loswenstein, Coughlin's part ner, swore that he recognized one of the knives as the one Coughin had carried for a long time, the other one he was pretty sure of, but not positive.

After a slight delay, Judge Wing resumed his argument for the defeace.

Judge Wing said as he ended Saturday so he began to day with the danger and untrust worthiness of circumstantial evidence. After dwelling for some time on this point, he, for the first time, referred to the testimony against the suspects. That part of it given by Salcon-keeper Nieman was picked up and the side favourable to the defeace shown to the jury. The reluctance of the witness to positively 4 was argued upon at great leng h, and inas-much as the witness had not been certain of the men there was rot, in the speaker's mind, any reason to believe that he was certain of the date. Continuing on this line he argued that Nieman not being certain and the Hylands, on the other hand, being most positively on the other hand, being most positively certain, the testimony of the latter should receive the credence of the jury. "On the night of May 4 P. O'Sullivan was in his home," exclaimed the attorney; "if you do not believe it then you must set aside the testimony of the entire household with which O'Sullivan lived." Attorney Wing then took up Dan Couplin's alibi and declared it was all right. He said that it had been charged that the witnesses had committed perjury. "If such was the fact, why don't they indict and prosecute the periured." Naxy the speaker up ceeded to belittle jured." Next the speaker proceeded to belittle "Major's" tough character as his weapon. In this fashion the speaker continued to dispose of the numerous phases of the trial. The suspects paid strict attention to every word. They seemed to drink in each sentence with the eagerness of a weary traveller in the desert. Dan Coughlin was the most attentive of the five. Regarding the identification of Coughlin and Kunze by Mertes and the identification of Dinan's horse, Judge Wing had considerable to say about the similarity of description of different individuals. He maintained that no reliance was to be placed on either identification. He cited the case of Theore, who, he said, had been duplicated a hundred times during the wash wear on account of the minute description furnished by the authorities.

The idea of a sane man, while suspected of murder, carrying for two weeks in his pocket the knives of the murdered man was, in Abthe habit of going to bed early, were sound torney Wing's mind, too ridiculous a proposisleepers, not likely to hear what was going on, tion to be entertained for a moment. The conspiracy and its relation to camp 20 next claimed the advocate's attention. "The case of con spiracy must be established by the State beyond who told them; why, Patrick O'Sullivan, the a reasonable doubt," he said, "either such a next door neighbor of the Carlsons." He called case must be proved or this trial must be dropattention to Coughlin having denounced Oronin ped and the prisoners discharged," and the as a north side Catholic, who was unworthy of only proof that such a conspiracy did exist wan as a north side Catholio, who was unworthy of being connected with the Irish came, and to the only proof that such a conspiracy did exist wan detective seeking the services of Major Sampson to do up" the doctor, and then the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such the defence sought to throw discredit on such the area of the area of the services of the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such the area of the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw the counsel for the defence sought to throw the counsel for the defence sought to throw discredit on such that the counsel for the defence sought to throw the counsel for the defence sought to the counsel for the counsel fo nothing to show that a conspiracy existed. In may be true that factions existed in the society, that Oronin led one faction and somebody else another, but the only thing that can be made clear is that some men disliked Oronin for his stand on certain points. The assumption that the murder of Dr. Grenin had been decided Irish cause to-day are those who came here, got on the stand and told the whole truth."

With this, although the hour for the noon recess had not arrived, the States-Attorney saked permission to postpone the closing of his spech until the atternoon.

The Cours granted the request and adjourned.

Judge Longenecker, continuing his argument this afternoon, said: "What more evidence do you want that the trunk found in the ditch was the one that was taken to the cottage. In the catch basis, in which was the Coughlin's connection with the white horse was innocent, why hasn's the man been brought back, and why hasn's the man come back. I wish he had come back, but the State with all its resources had been unable to bring him back, and neither has the defence. As for the man himself, there is little reason why he should come back. It would have been too risky a thing to do with a prosecution subtentiely anything and anybody. That man identify anything and anybody. That man would have been identified by Mrs. Conklin.

He knew it and stayed away."

At this point the Court adjourned until tomorrow, when Judge Wing will continue his address and Attorney Ingham begin for the
