

ingredients named, but, owing probably to the fact that they modified the formula somewhat, one of them taking the oil and the other the brandy, there is a difference of opinion in this office as to the general effect of the medicine.

F. W. A., Richmond: "I am a general canvasser for the sale of tombstones, musical instruments, maps, periodical literature, etc., and would like to add your paper to my list of novelties. What are your terms?"

You will see our terms quoted at the head of the fourth page. We have read the circular you enclose, but we are at a loss to understand whether you sell tombstones, and throw in musical instruments, maps, etc., as an inducement to people to buy tombstones, or whether you sell the maps and things, and throw in a tombstone as a sort of chromo. In any case, however, you are engaged in a noble calling—alleviating the grief and despondency of the disconsolate and bereaved ones with maps and musical instruments, while at the same time you are prepared to tranquilize and restrain
