Made on High Waisted Lines and Exploit Flounce Designs.

That good old-fashioned word "pet-ticoat" is just about the most important in the fashion vocabulary of the moment. It is used oftenest by the wizards of the costume sphere, and the sight of it in reality or in print beings. the sight of it in reality or in print provokes rapturous comment from the ardent devotee, for the petticoat owns the charms that render the flaring skirt of 1915 a foy to the eye or a hopeless disappointment to the wearner. No matter how faultless the cut of the voluminous skirt unless the solid provided by the careful gardener, of the voluminous skirt, unless the necessary foundation is present, in the form of a dainty full petticoat the desired flare will be missing.

UNKEMPT SOLDIER IS

Gamin's Rebuke to Gilded Youth Typical of Popular Feeling.

Special Cable to The Toronto World.
PARIS, March 13.—A new word has been coined in the French language and will soon be adopted by the French Academy. This epithet is recorded by Georges Ohnet, the novelist, as having used in his hearing by a typical Parisian gavroche, or street arab. Three territorial soldiers, wounded and in uncouth, muddy uniforms, unshayen beards and uncut hair, were walking near Madelcine Church, and an immaculately dressed, clean-shayen gilded youth, wearing smartly creased varnished shoes, hair frizzled intily, gloved and powdered, watched the three soldiers with a pitying The gamin who was pedalling a grecer's carrier tricycle, saw the smile, and with malicious sarcasm shouted to the tenderfoot youth. "Yes, take a good look at them, you espece de epile. This expression was at once taken by a chorus on the boulevards and become the popular contemptuous

Applied to a man it is emphatically seathing, especially in war time. Moreover, "epile" is the exact opposite to the term "poilu" or unshaven soldier, which is, since the war, a universally favorite and popular name for the French soldier in the trencies.

Do not think that because the danger of severe frosts is over that your garden has weathered its worst woes. March is always a hard month for trees and shrubs and bulbs and roots of every kind for many reasons.
Alternate days of unusual sunshine and warmth, cold nipping winds and gray skies, sleety rains and sudden frosts tegether make March one of the most dangerous of all months for garages.
