503

chevalier flate of ying the of this ons; debut the , which e Lewis king the

e totally

could be a strong dd to it was, to nself on ımanded of 800 is numdid not of this neral atfound it ed with regnably ne 26th, Tremble eme was, general xecuting e him to tle army nd had a ng himipon the fingle fingle chance of holding out for a confiderable time a wretched fortification; a chance which an action in the field could hardly alter, at the fame time that it gave an additional one, perhaps a better. If the event was not prosperous, he determined to hold out to the last extremity; and then to retreat to the isle of Orleans, with what was left of the garrison, to wait for reinforcements.

In consequence of this resolution, the general marched out the 28th, with all the force he could muster, which did not exceed 3000 men; forming them on the heights of Abraham, in order of battle; and obferving that the french army was upon the march in one column, as far he could fee; he thought this the lucky moment; and moved with the utmost order to attack them before they had formed. He foon beat them from the heights they had possessed, though they were well disputed. Major Dalling, who commanded a corps of light infantry, having forced the enemies grenadiers from a house and wind-mill, in attempting to regain the flank of the english army, was charged, thrown into diforder, retired to the rear, and from the number of officers killed and wounded, could never again be brought up during the action. Otway's regiment was ordered to advance immediately, and fuftain the right wing, which the enemy in vain made two attempts to penetrate. While this passed there, the left was not idle; they had dispossessed the enemy of two redoubts, and suftained with unparralleled firmness, the bold united efforts of the enemies regulars, indians and canadians, till at last, fairly fought down, and reduced to a handful, they were obliged to yield to superior num-This disorder was soon communicated to the right; but the whole retired in fuch a way, that the enemy did not venture upon a brisk purfuit. Most of the cannon was left, as the rough-Kk4