The Marriage Riddle.

Divorce, according to an official bulletin of the United States Census Bureau, is steadily increasing. The allimportant question of marriage and divorce has in recent years received the attention of the pulpit and the press, and has received additional interest by reason of a number of opinions and suggestions regarding the subject, advanced by well known men in public life and writers, says Rudolph de Zapp in The-Washington Herald.

Naturally the question of who should and who should not marry has agitated the public mind almost ever since the institution of marriage. Disraeli, the English statesman and novelist says that matrimony has often been considered a condition not well suited to the domestic life of genius: "It is accompanied by too many embarrassments for the head and the heart." Fueddli, the Swiss artist, contended that the married state was incompatible with a high cultivation of the fine arts. Pedresc, the great French collector refused marriage, convinced that whose temper are adverse to his pursuits, he must courageously prepare for a martyrdom." And thus the wife of Bishop Cooper, while her husband was employed on his Lexicon, one day consigned the volume of many years' labor to the flames, and obliged that scholar to begin a second slege of Troy in a second Lexicon. The wife of Whitelocke often destroyed his manuscripts, and the marks of her nails have come down to posterity in the numerous lacerations still gaping in his memorials.

numerous lacerations still gaping in his memorials.

The learned Sir Henry Saville, who devoted more than half of his life and nearly £10,000 to his magnificent edition of Saint Chrysostom, led a very uneasy life between that Saint and Lady Saville. Milton carried nothing of the greatness of his mind in the choice of his wives: his first wife was the object of sudden fancy. He left the metropolis, and unexpectedly returned a married man, united to a woman of such uncongenial disposition man of such uncongenial disposition that the romp was frightened at the literary habits of the great poet, found his house solitary, beat his nephew, and ran away after a single month's residence. To this circumstance the world owes his famous treatise on divorce, and a party who were situated like Milton, calling themselves Miltonists.

Thomas Hollis, who, solely devoted to literature and republicanism, was occu-pied in furnishing Europe and America with editions of his favorite authors, would not marry lest marriage should interrupt the labors of his platonic politics. Moliere married a girl from his own troupe who made him experience all those bitter disgusts and ridiculous embarrassments which he himself played at the theatre. Addison, Steele and Rousseau were similarly married to uncongenial partners who were the source congenial partners who were the source of much unhappiness to them.

Pedresc, the great French collector, refused marriage, convinced that the cares of a family are too absorbing for the freedom necessary to literary pursuits, and a sacrifice of fortune incompatible with his great designs. Boyle, who would not suffer his studies to be interrupted by "household affairs." lived as a bearder with his sister, Lady Ranelagh, Boyle, Hobbes, Hume, Gibbon and Adam Smith decided for celfbacy.

Flying Fish.
Interesting are the habits of the flying fish, that queer denizes of the fly-ing fish, that queer denizes of the sea, found principally in the region of the trade winds. Does it, rise from the sea like a bird? you ask. No, it shoots out A friend said to him not long ago:
"Why don't you get a nurse for your wife? It must be terrible to be at her beck and call night and day."

And the "tough" man looked at the friend in utter amazement and said:
"She didn't marry a nurse. She married a husband. She did that when she was young and pretty and could have married most any one she wanted to. She trusted me then, and you bet she wasn't fooled, either."

This country is crowded with men not half that distance is covered. A she wasn't fooled, either."

This country is crowded with men who would do the same thing in the same place.

A ship sailing thru the trade winds will often be visited on dark nights by flying fish, which hit the sails or rigging and fall on deck, where, of course, they soon give up life.—St. Nicholas.

Dining Car Service.

The Grand Trunk are receiving a great number of letters from their patrons praising the excellent service on their dining cars, which is beyond comparison. A commercial traveler writing to a friend recently says: "On dining car No. 2802, train No. 1, between Port Huron and Chicago, I had as nice a dinner as I bad ever been served with in any dining car. The service was excellent, employes courteous and evexcellent, employes courteous and everybody seemed to be anxious to give good service."

Playing chess by cable is a thoroly familiar feature of that game in this part of the world, but playing active outdoor match games by mail is a new outdoor match games by mall is a new thing in the way of sporting contests. Out in Atchison, Kan., there is an archery club that recently played a match game with the Chicago Archery Club by mail, each team shooting on their own grounds and mailing scores to their opponents on the following to their opponents on the following day. And they found it exciting at that, says The New York Press.

Three or four good-sized tomatoes, properly sliced, are quite sufficient for a small family service of broiled tomatoes. After peeling them and chilling them to keep them firm, slice them. Season with salt and pepper, and dip them in oil and then in sifted bread crumbs. Melted butter may be used in place of the oil. Cover them well with a tin pan to keep in the heat, and broil for eight minutes, turning them when brown. If they "run" dredge a little flour or powdered bread crumbs over them. They should be a rich brown when done. Serve them on a
