RED BLANKET AND HIGH HAT

The Inevitable Dress of the Mexican Peon—His Inevitable Fear of Catching Cold.

The dress of the peon is picturesque and to the foreign observer even strikes a note of almost operatic strain. As the sun sets the peon dons his poncho, or serape, as the red blanket which is his invariable outer garment is termed. In the cool air of the morning or evening he speaks little, covering his mouth with the corner of the serape, for he has a constant and, as far as the foreigner can observe, unfounded fear of pneumonia. The crowning point of his dress is the great conical, broad-brimmed hat, which is the main and peculiar characteristic of the inhabitants of this land; a national and remarkable headgear, which is met with nowhere else.

There is even a brigand-like local color about the Mexican peon, and, indeed, of some of the upper classes in their national dress. The peon, or the vaquero, as he stalks muffled through the streets or plaza, or lurks within his habitation with a corner of the serape thrown over his shoulder and a knife stuck in his belt, is a subject which might have stepped from the boards of a theatre. Although he is respectful in his demeanor and often devout in his language the open greeting and confident demeanor of the Anglo-Saxon is absent. Who can blame him?

The oppression of centuries weighs upon him; he has been doomed to ignorance and poverty ever since Iberian conquerors put foot upon the soil which was his, and the descendants of this same conquering race do little but perpetuate his melancholy state. In the years since the republic was established he has been constantly dragged from his peaceful labors to serve this or that revolutionary malcontent, and so made to destroy rather than create industry. And today he is the subject of such unequal wealth and class distinction that change seems impossible to hope for. Yet there is some progress.—Mexico, by C. Reginald Esbeck exercise will be of a most elevating character. It is safe to say that great as other celebrations of this auspicious event may be, all will be eclipsed both in attendance and enthusiasm by this ancient and honorable fraternal gathering. It includes in its ranks the most distinguished citizens of all these great countries, and all the commercial, manufacturing, and business walks of life. It is estimated that there will be at least 4,000 Masonic brethren in attendance and it would not be surprising to well-informed members of the craft if double that number reported. The importance of such a gathering of notable men cannot be overestimated, and it is safe to say that it will mark an epoch in international affairs.

SHAKING ST. PAUL'S

London, July 15.—The effect of motor-bus vibration, which threatens the safety of such giant landmarks as St. Paul's cathedral, Westminster Abbey and the clock tower of the House of Commons, is being made the subject of careful tests by the National Physical Laboratory.

Investigators have learned through delicate instruments placed in these buildings that the amount of vibration is largely a matter of speed of the buses. When three buses were driven past the cathedral at six miles an hour, no disturbance was recorded. But at twelve miles an hour, the vibration was marked. Both vertical and horizontal movements were noted.

Plans for a system of steel supports have already been found necessary for St. Paul's, owing to the disintegrating effects of a traffic on which Sir Christopher Wren did not reckon.
