FINANCIAL WORLD

STEEL WAS THE CENTRE OF TRADING

New York, Sept. 30.—Further reduction of the short interest was the mainspring which propelled the stock market today, and the rise which was interrupted yesterday by Italy's declaration of war was resumed. Evidence that the short element was engaged in more covering was abundant. The strength displayed by U. S. Steel was a logical result, the short interest in this stock apparently having reached unusually large proportions. U. S. Steel closed at 61 5-8, a gain of 1 1-2 points on the day and of 10 points from the low level of the recent break. Other stocks advanced as much. The market was heedless of the unfavorable conditions both abroad and at home. Despite the unsettlement of European bourses, caused by the outbreak of war, stocks showed no further re-action of foreign influences, and the opinion was expressed that unless other nations should become involved in hostilities no serious disturbances need be expected. London, where Americans were nominally lower, traded lightly here, with a mixture of purchases and sales.

Official declaration of the striks on the Harriman railroads was virtually without effect. News that the strike had been begun was followed by a fractional recession in the price of Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, but both stocks subsequently rallied and closed with substantial gains.

There was further decline today in foreign exchange rates, which are now nearly 50 points lower than two days ago. This decline after several weeks in which the tendency was almost uniformly upwards, was attributed to the heavy influx of cotton bills and to the cessation of liquidation of American stocks for European account in the local market. An immediate influence toward lower rates was the engagement yesterday of nearly $1,500,000 gold for shipment to Paris. There was no indication today that the outward movement of gold would assume large proportions. The increased offerings of bills led many bankers to believe that the exchange market would be sufficiently low to prevent heavy gold exports. A small loss in surplus reserve was recorded in the bank statement. The actual table, which reflected the engagement of gold for shipment abroad, disclosed a loss of $2,670,000. There was a moderate contraction in both cash and loans.

Total sales, par value, $1,526,000. U. S. bonds unchanged on call on the week.

CLOSING STOCK LETTER.

By Direct Private Wire to J. C. Mackintosh & Co.

New York, Sept. 30.—The foreign markets this morning showed no abnormal weakness as a result of the declaration of war between Turkey and Italy and our own market showed decided strength from the outset. It was common talk on the floor that the big interests had taken a hand at supporting prices against bear attacks which suggested that the stocks which they had recently acquired in support of the market had not yet been re-sold. Added to this support was a considerable demand from the short interest, the net result being substantial advances throughout the active list. The strike on the Harriman Lines appeared to be "coppered" as a depressing influence, traders generally realizing that the railroads were well equipped to deal with these disturbances at this time. The action of the market furnished some encouragement to would-be investors for whose benefit the bull manipulation was perhaps intended. The situation at large, however, shows no change for the better and while the technical position of the market seems strong enough to warrant expectations of a further recovery in the event there is no further unfavorable news, the general business and economic outlook at home and abroad is far from auspicious from a bullish standpoint and any pronounced recovery at the present time would be likely of a short duration. On the other hand liquidation has been pretty thorough and a further decline would likely attract substantial investment buying.

BACHE'S WEEKLY REVIEW

New York, Sept. 30.—Social unrest caused by high cost of living and by the increasing numbers out of employment is said to be evident everywhere. "So long as this unrest exists," said the head of one of the largest financial institutions to the Journal of Commerce, "any government that does not recognize it—does not cater to it—cannot continue. The popular panacea for all kinds of social ills is to 'bust the trusts.'"

The popular remedy is generally the wrong one when any deep, economic question is to be settled. In Germany, where the subject has received the most careful consideration for years, the theory is entirely the opposite. It is that in granting to trade and commerce the very extensive privileges which are allowed in the way of combination, the general interests of the public at large are protected by the resulting prosperity of such interests, even though the immediate effect may be to enhance the cost of the commodity controlled.

The large concerns make more money, but so too do the smaller ones and every one along the line down to the day laborer is benefited by the enormous expenditures and activities, giving employment to all classes. Because a number of people make large fortunes out of this run of prosperity, is no argument against it. The man who makes $5,000 should not sulk because another man makes $50,000. It is all, in the long run a matter of brains, this inequality of fortune, and has been since the world began. If God had intended all people to be equally prosperous He would have made all the brains of the same size.

High prices have come to stay. Reducing the whole country's business to such a withdrawal of confidence and enterprise as will bring on hard times, and which is the course now being pursued in America, only makes matters worse and will not reduce commodity prices. Social unrest is always under the surface. Discontent and jealousy of the more successful individual or corporation has always existed and always will. "The general interests of the public at large are protected by the resulting prosperity," says Germany. Our legislation is striking down, one after the other, the great corporations and drawing the nets around railroad earnings and these great combinations, which other countries foster and which would furnish employment and profit to the whole people, are being choked into increasing activity. Their vast expenditures, which would benefit the whole business body, are cut down steadily and the country suffers accordingly.

The only remedy seems to be to let the malady run its course, and when the hard times come the people will discover that the golden goose has been killed—and what killed it.

Business Welfare.

The prosperity of business is the one great essential to national life and the public leader who takes up the campaign in behalf of business, whether he be Democrat or Republican, will be sure to command the majority of votes in the United States because by the time of the 1912 elections, the working people, through bitter experience, will have had their eyes opened to the basic cause of all their adversity.

Our present legislation is turning the sweat of labor into idleness, and the strain of brain and intelligent effort into mockery. It is holding the threat of prison over enterprise, under a dangerous law, passed in ignorance and fear, and aimed to stifle progress which other civilized countries welcome and foster. This law makes criminal that which is the logical outcome of modern economic methods.

Business Representation.

The London Sunday "Times" using the figures of representation in Congress from the Bache "Review," says:

"In less than two months Congress will reassemble at Washington and both parties are expected to vie with each other in passing popular measures so as to manoeuvre into a good tactical position for next year's elections. Whether these measures hurt business or not is a minor consideration. Nothing can be said in favor of the Protectionist tariffs in the States and little for the trusts. But the business of the country has been built up on these two foundations, and any violent and inconsiderate change would unquestionably greatly disturb trade. Unfortunately, the business community in the States has no confidence in the commercial aptitude of Congress. There are over fifteen million people engaged in trade and manufacture in America, yet fewer than fifty members of Congress belong to that class. There 135,000 lawyers in America, and no fewer than 212 lawyers are in Congress. There we have the fons et origo mali, the source of the puerile legislation, which nobody really understands, which different courts interpret differently, but which all the time is disturbing the calculations of business people. These are the considerations which explain the sale of Americans which took place some months ago when prices were standing sky-high."

The Review has repeatedly called attention to the fact that upon the great army of business must fall whatever movement for sanity in legislation is undertaken. The difficulty is that outside of large enterprises, there is in the rank and file of business men, no grasp or appreciation of the situation. A correspondent of the Sun in a letter on the need of a campaign of education among business men against the Sherman law, says:

"The men at the head of small enterprises, and they are in the majority, are of smaller calibre, and they are the playthings of the demagogue. The whole country must be taken into consideration and the temper of the majority of its citizens must be changed before any progress can be made.

"The retail butcher, the corner grocer, the man who sells shoes or dress goods or automobiles, all these believe just as firmly as do the laboring classes that the government is controlled by the interests, that all the men who have done big things are dishonest. In other words, the business man is as firm a disciple of the men who talk big things, as he is patiently awaiting the dissolution of the interests, having been taught that it will be worth great personal sacrifice.

"The problem that is before us is of greater magnitude than most of us realize."

Current Events.

War just declared by Italy against Turkey brings to a head the long unsettled Balkan question. That Italy is not thus taking the initiative without understanding with the other powers, is evident. It is to be hoped that no complications will arise involving other interests.

The railway strike on the Harriman lines has not been ordered at this writing, but seems imminent. Railroad managers assert that a better time could hardly be chosen if a conflict must come, as the untenableness of the federation demands will give the unions little public sympathy.

The Business Record.

The volume of business seems not to have been affected very largely thus far by the disturbances in the securities market. This appears to be especially so in the iron and steel trade, and Dun's "Review" calls attention to the fact that less sensitiveness is paid to financial conditions in this line than has been customary in the past. This all may be laid to the fact that supplies in nearly every line of business are well cut down, so that immediate requirements have to be filled, whether or no, and also indicates to some extent that credit is sound and not as sensitive to financial disturbances as would be the case if trade was at all extended.

The bank clearings show an increase of 11,8 per cent. over the same period last year, but this gain is due to the expansion of 17,7 per cent. in New York City, the result here being caused by the large volume of business in the stock market during the last week. As heretofore, no large enterprises are being undertaken and conservatism is the rule in all branches of trade and industry. The striking decline in the stock market, followed, after the statement of the Steel directors, by excitement and rather violent fluctuations, has been succeeded by much calmness, with gradual appreciation of the price level, due perhaps more to deliberate covering by shorts than to any interest by outside purchasers.

SOMETHING ABOUT TRIPOLI

The northern half is usually called Tripoli; the southern, Fezzan.

It is a big sandy desert excepting the low coasts and fertile spots near water.

The chief agricultural products are wheat, dates, grapes, and olives. Not much farming is done; sheep and cattle are raised to some extent.

Tripoli is the largest city; and it is the center of commerce. At one time, many years ago, it was an important port.

In very early time the country formed a portion of the territory of the Carthaginians. It next passed to the Romans. About the beginning of the third century, A. D., it was given the name of Regio Tripolitana, on account of its three principal cities, Ea, Sabrata and Leptis. Hence the modern name.

In the seventh century it was captured by the Arabs, and Mohammedanism supplanted Christianity—the Christians who refused to be converted to the Moslem religion had their heads chopped off.

In 1510 Ferdinand, the Catholic, conquered the country, and from 1530 to 1551 it was in the possession of the Knights of St. John.

Since 1551 it has formed a portion of the Turkish empire.

During much of this period it was a pirate stronghold.

Piratical tendencies were eradicated by American men-of-war and Stephen Decatur in the early years of the nineteenth century.

Turkey maintains a large army in Tripoli because of frequent revolutions.

The country includes about 400,000 square miles of land and about 1,000,000 people, mostly Moors and Berbers; the Turkish element outside of official circles is limited.
