The Athenaeum. The walls are white, but not with snow. They are as pale in summer time, For herb or grass may never grow Upon their slopes of lime.

Within the circle of the hills A ring, all flowering in a round, An orchard-ring of almond fills The plot of stony ground.

More fair than happier trees, I think, Grown in well-watered pasture land, These parched and stunted branches, pink Above the stones and sand.

O, white, asture, ideal place, Where very few will care to come, Where spring hath lost the waving grace She wears for us at home!

Fain would I sit and watch for hours The holy whiteness of thy hills. Their wreath of pale auroral flowers, Their peace the silence fills.

A place of secret peace thou art, Such peace as in an heur of poin One moment fills the amazed heart And never returns again.

Great Minds Wondering What to do With the Traffic at King and Yongestreets. The City Council last night tried to find a so-lution of the difficulty caused by the increased traffic at the corner of King and Yongestreets. Both thoroughfares are narrow, and are almost completely taken up with street railway tracks and switches. The increasent turning of street cars, not to mention vehicles of every de-soringtion, renders it almost impossible for pe-destrians to cross over. One proposition was to have the street cars go down Yonge to Front-street, thus doing away with the switches. The council decided in the mean time to have the sidewalks at those points re-liad to a proper curve, and that the northeest and Surbourne-streets, will be similarly dealt with. The Traffic.
