

"Ireland have ended long ago, and if the memory of
"them remain, it is not in bitterness nor revenge
"No, they are thinking now, not of their persecutors,
"but how best they may honor and serve in the days
"of their religious freedom the King they followed
"during the long night of their persecution. Now
"they will restore him to the churches they build,
"churches to take the place of their older temples,
"from which He has been driven, and they have
"been despoiled. They will cross the seas bearing
"the standard of their King."
