BORNE on a flood of blazing light,
The sun led on the ardent day;
All nature hail'd the warm delight,
Yet sickn'd at the fervid ray.
To join the herds in shadowy rest,
The bleating flocks forsook the plain;
The lingering pulse of life oppress'd,
A languor felt thro' every vein.
Mild evening comes—a gentle breeze,
Revives to fan the winding stream:

Soft wispers die along the trees,
And light decays with gradual gleam.
As some coy nymph of doubtful tread
Bathful to meet a lover's gaze;
Still hesitating o'er the mead,
Not quite retires, yet hardly stays.
So light's last blushes veil'd in dew,
Still bid the doubtful landscaper rise;
Deep shades, still deeper shades subdue,
Till night in darkness wraps the skies.
