

DEATH AND LIFE

I now wandered along the heath, until I came to a place where, beside a thick fence, sat a man, his eyes fixed intently on the red ball of the setting sun.

My opinion of death, brother, is much the same as that in the old song of Pharaoh, which I have heard my grand-dam sing—

WEEDS

WEEDS postulate a weeder, and the enthusiastic weeder would asseverate that it is the practice of this craft which makes the garden "the purest of human pleasures."

We cannot all of us command so inspiring a setting for our weeding. We do not, we at home, ordinarily slash at the foe with a knife drawn from its sheath on our hip.

But an English garden has its romance of weeding too. You step out on a sunny March day when Spring is sighing in her sleep, and you listen to her breathing and watch to see the Sleeping Beauty wake.

up another worm for him. We must not forfeit the respect of our underlings, so let us set to work.

Doctors differ as to the best instrument with which to make the attack. The truth is that, like the practitioner of golf, one needs an assortment of implements in order to play the game with success.

When a man dies, he is cast into the earth, and his wife and child sorrow over him. If he has neither wife nor child, then his father and mother, I suppose; and if he is quite alone in the world, why, then, he is cast into the earth, and there is an end of the matter.

We have named some of the most persistent and obstinate of our foes. Who that has tried to grapple with "squitch" in his asparagus-bed but has come off second-best? It is perhaps impossible to dogmatize, for each garden has its own master-weed which expellat jureo as you deludedly think, tamen usque recurat as punctually as the swallows return.

But an English garden has its romance of weeding too. You step out on a sunny March day when Spring is sighing in her sleep, and you listen to her breathing and watch to see the Sleeping Beauty wake.

But stay! we are neglecting our weeding. The robin, "the under-gardener," as he has been pleasantly styled, is sitting on the fork which you left stuck in the ground while you could not resist rushing off to see whether your Androsace were all dead, and that black beauty weather-eye of the under-wood, watching to see how soon you are going to come and turn imagine that they would keep in their proper place. Not they! Some thirty years ago the lovely tall-willow-herb, the rose-bay, was a comparatively infrequent plant. But he has taken it into his head to set out on his travels, and now as you look out of your railway carriage in late summer you will see glorious sheets of him coloring the landscape up and down the country.

What do you think made our friend Lord Albemarle, colonel of a regiment of guards, governor of Virginia, groom of the stole, and ambassador to Paris—amounting in all to sixteen or seventeen thousand a year? Was it his birth? No; a Dutch gentleman only. Was it his estate? No he had none. Was it his learning, his parts, his political abilities and application? You can answer these questions easily and as soon as I can make them. What was it then? Many people wondered, but I do not. It was his air, his address, his manner, and his graces. He pleased and by pleasing, became a favorite; and by becoming a favorite, became all that he has been since.

Are afflictions aught but mercies in disguise? Th' alternate cup, Medicinal though bitter, and prepared By Love's own hand for salutary ends? Mallet's Amyntor and Theodora.
