Rippling Rhymes WORKINGS OF FATE

My Uncle James, with brooding eye, gazed on the autos whizzing by. "Those blamed machines," he grim-ly said, "just strew the highway with their dead. I wouldn't ride in one I wot, if you'd give me a house and A wheel flies off, the springs collapse, and then where are your auto chaps? Go ask the undertaker gent, who'll tell you where their $3,400—Brant Ave., modern house; pieces went. I do not wish to scorch and flee; a nag is good enough Then Uncle James rose for me." from his chair and harnessed up the old gray mare. "Methinks I'll go to town," he said, "and buy nine loaves of Graham bread" A piece of paper flew along, when Bess, the mare, was going strong. She snorted, shied, kicked up her heels, and busted all the shafts and wheels; her big steel shoes hit uncle's dome; an auto brought his fragments home. My Uncle John took jealous care in following his bill of fare.
