Custer's Last Fight.

Custer's Last Fight.

Aubrey Mittenthal's Company made a great killing at the Grand last night, presenting the historical melodrama, "Custer's Last Fight." A crowded house witnessed the wholesale massacre and the brave work of Custer and Buffalo Bill. The gallery gods were in high glee and had the time of their lives. The scenic effects were very fine, among the best being: Lone Tree Canyon, Yellow Hand's Tepec, Silver Moon Pass, and Custer's headquarters.

The head critic of the gallery handed out the following statement after the show: "Custer's fight is the best ever bad, but Frank Armstrong as Buffalo Bill, and J. M. Stock as General Custer, were the real thing. Miss Nelson, as Dove Eye, captured the hearts of all the boys for her bravery."

Among the mine owners, mining engineers and mining prospectors the chief topic of discussion is "Who killed the Yukon?" The ordinary edizen may be surprised at the expression, as the public generally are unaware that somebody has killed the goose that laid the goldenegg. And it is really dead? Ask the Government statistician and he will tell you the production of gold has fallen to a low ebb, the population is growing steadily smaller, and the essential man of the community—the prospector—has gone to Alaska, where affairs are more pleasant and more progressive.

It cannot be the climate which killed the Yukon, since that is much the same as in Alaska, which is developing rapidly. It is not the lack of pay dirt, because there are thousands of miles of unexplored country probably as rich as the little twelve-mile square known as the Klondyke. It is not the inaccessibility of the region, because a man may go in now with one-tenth the expense of ten years ago. It is not due to any change in the price of gold, since gold has maintained its value and shows signs of increasing. It etnnot be because supplies are too dear, for supplies can be obtainable only in Seattle or Vancouver. obtained in Dawson that were once ob-tainable only in Seattle or Vancouver.

The real cause is unknown, or elsthose who know refuse to tell. There are men who state that it is maladmin istration, but on this point the evidence is conflicting. However, the situation is serious and if the Yukon is to be sav ed the Institute of Mining Engineers and the Ottawa authorities nust act quickly and energetically. If the Yukon were to be closed up, it would be a dis-tinct national loss. Indeed it would be national disgrace. Canada cannot afford to allow any Canada cannot afford to allow any part of her territory to fall behind in development. The whole country must move together, and the Yukon must be given the same opportunity as any one of the older Provinces.—Canadian Cour-

SKIN SOFT AS A BABY'S AND WITHOUT A SCAR

"I have a cousin in Rockingham Co. who once had a skin disease from her birth until she was six years of age. Her father had spent a fortune on her to get her cured and none of the treatments did her any good. Old Dr. G—suggested that he try the Cuticura Remedies which he did. When he commenced to use it the child was almost in a solid scab. He had used it about two months and the child was well. I was there when they commenced to use your Cuticura Remedies. I stayed that week and then returned home and stayed two weeks and then went back and stayed with them two weeks longer and when I went home I could hardly believe she was the same child. Her skin was as soft as a baby's without a scar on it. I have not seen her in seventeen years but I have leard from her and the last time I heard from her and the last time I heard from her she was well.—That is where I became acquainted with Cuticura. I hope this may be of some service to you in the future. Mrs. W. P. Ingle, Burlington, N. C., June 16, 1905."

CUSTOMS OF ESKIMOS

Evidences That They Have Any Belief Respecting Future Life.

V. Steiansson, ethnologist of the Au-glo-American Polar expedition, who is connected with the Peanody Museum of Harvard University, and wno lived with the Eskimos last winter at the mouth of the Mackenzie River, related recently to a reporter of the Seattle Post-Intelli-gency curious practices among that peogeneer curious practices among that peo-ple in manifesting their respect for the pie in manifesting their respect for the dead.

"The degree of the civilization of a nation," send Mr. Stefansson, "is largely measured by the respect shown for the dead, and, curiously enough, while these Eskinsos cannot be regarded as being civilized, their continued respect for their dead would do credit in character and sincerity to any of the nations of the earth. They rear no monuments to mark the resting place of their dead and on which to record the virtues and achievements of their heroes, but if 'memory is the only thing that grief cau call her own,' surely this one thing is evidenced in affectionate and enduring customs by these simple and generous people of the far North. These customs offer some of the very few evidences that these people have any belief respecting a future lite.

When a death occurs, the body is triken to some suitable spot and covered with debris of various kinds, driftwood forming a large part of it. Food, consisting mainly of fish (for this is their chief article of diet), is placed on the pile along with simple presents of things they think will be useful to the departed spirit. This is renewed so long as they have opportunity to do so. As they seldom stay longer than one year in a place, this period marks the limit of this expression of their sorrow and interest in the future welfare of the dead.

"But they do not stop with the giving of food and presents. And this throws light on another of their curious customs. The name of the dead person is given to the child next born, and if no birth occurs until after a number of the tribe have dead, then the names of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the dead are given to the lead of all the tribe have died, then the names of all the dead are given to the newly-born child. I know of one instance of nine names being thus given to a child. Then the giving of presents is continued, only they are given to the child. But it must be understood that in giving them to the child, the presents are really intended for the spirits of the dead. Of course, they do not exactly speak of them as spirits, but they have a vague, indefinable conviction that somehow and somewhere their departed friends and comrades still exist and may need their help. This seems to be the natural expression of their communistic practices. So far as food, clothing, shelter, and protection are concerned, everything is held in common for the common good. It is for this reason that unselfishness is genuinely characteristic of these Eskimos. Kindness that is limited only by the simple and unfavored character of their environment seems to be an instinct, for even the children are quiet, obedient and deferential to their elders, and in their the dead are given to the newly-born child. I know of one instance of nine lively sense of personal rights so usual in young people. Thus they grow to manhood and womanhood, and it seems natural that their memory and affection for the dead should find expression in for the dead should find expression in simple acts of thoughtful consideration for their imagined needs. It is all very pretty and worthy of careful study. When I go back among this people, as I intend doing next spring, I shall have opportunity to gather many more and equally curious customs of these gener-ous Eskimos."

the Ericssons tamous.

The whole trip is charming, for there is great variety in the constantly changed its thanks. It made such a noise that at last it had to be put out. Even then it lingered outside for two hours, still barking its thanks. Would you believe it? That same dog came again by itself the next day have its paw dressed! When I heard this story I wondered if it had been made up. I wrote to the surgeon and asked him about it. He replied that it was quite true.—Little Folks.

"What little boy can tell me the dif-ference between the 'quick' and the 'dead'?" asked the Sunday school teach-willie waved his hand frantically,

"Well, Willier"
"Please, ma'am, the 'quick are the ones
