GOOD SPORT WITH SWORDFISH.

Excitement not yet known to amateur fishermen. Plenty of Them Would Enjoy a Tussle With a 16-Foot Fish Whose Horn Would Pierce a Boat's Planking—Best Waters for the Sport Off Cape Cod.

The few sportsmen who visit the Massachusetts coast in the summer for big fishing become acquainted only with the sea bass and the shark, while the swordfish, remaining always in the open sea, is left to the men who fish not for sport but for a livelihood.

Yet if the lover of exciting sport should care to master the use of the harpoon and resort to the open sea for his diversion he would discover in the swordfish the swiftest swimmer, the hardest fighter and one of the most interesting denizens of the ocean.

Upon the appearance of swordfish in Cape Cod waters most of the fishing vessels of the region, schooners and sloops, by reason of the mackerel season being ended until autumn, abandon their nets and take to the harpoon.

A pulpit is rigged on the forward end of the jibboom. On account of the poisonous nature of the swordfish jugs tackle is provided. A number of detachable harpoon darts, each carrying a sixty fathom line coiled around a paint-foot bearing the owner's name, together with the eighteen-foot harpoon shaft, make the whole of the outfit.

The chief swordfishing territory of the Cape Cod region is the open sea stretching northward from No Man's Land. It was for this island, says St. Nicholas, that the Louise, a forty-five-foot auxiliary sloop, sailed about the middle of August, carrying provisions for a ten days' cruise.

Horace Wellman, one-time whalerman, a master of the harpoon and the best swordfisherman around Cape Cod, was her skipper. Brooks and Kelly, the steward, made up the rest of the crew.

As an extra man there was Thompson, who, although a good sailor, was inexperienced in swordfishing and correspondingly curious—a welcome addition, since it meant another pair of eyes aloft to look for fins.

Fifty miles out from No Man's Land the first fins were sighted. The Louise was making a little headway, the helmsman, his pipe dead, was dozing at his post, when Brooks, whose keen eyes had been sweeping the sea ahead, suddenly yelled, "Stabber! Har-p-l stabber!"

A quarter of a mile away on the starboard bow the two little black spots which, protruding like knife points above the water, marked the location of the possible first catch—or a shark. The main sheet was hauled in, Wellman caught the jibstay and swung to the pulpit on the jibboom.

Coming up to the fish properly is one of the swordfisherman's successful and profitable achievements. An unskilful party goes straight upon the prey regardless of the position of the sun. In the present instance had the sloop with the sun on her port tacked straight to starboard, the mainstay would have cast its broad shadow far beyond the striking range of the fisherman's way of distinguishing between these two is by the shark's second dorsal fin, which is invisible unless it leaps from the water; but this is not really the fisherman's method. He tells them by their actions in the water, for the swordfish, if in motion, always which he seldom is when harpooned—propels himself with a cross-wise motion of the tail, giving force to the movement of a backward flip like the stroke of a canoe paddle, while the shark is always in motion and sculls with his tail.

Brooks, who had been watching apprehensively for the latter sign of the fish ahead, now gave a grunt of delight and sang out, "Hit him!"

The purple body of the quarry could be seen almost under the jibboom. The skipper's broad back bent like a bow, his right hand raised high and doubled forward with a savage downward thrust. There was a thud and a moment's anxious suspense, Wellman leaning far over to see the result of his throw.

In the interval Kelly threw the keg clear and stopped the engine, to avoid any danger of cutting the trail rope. At the same moment there was a swirl of a mighty tail; a cataract of water struck the bowsprit and elongated into a gleaming ribbon of spray that ran out to sea with incredible swiftness, the painted keg lost to sight in the flying water. A chorus of whoops from aloft greeted the skipper as he swung to the cross-tree.

"He was a big un," he grunted, "he was all of sixteen feet."

Already the painted keg had become a mere speck on the water and was still receding, but the crew of the Louise made no effort to follow. Long experience had taught the swordfisherman the wisdom and the safety of allowing the catch to tire himself out before taking him aboard. To harpoon a swordfish with a line fast to the sloop would be the height of foolhardiness.

Once he reaches the end of his rope he would in most cases turn, and from being hunted play hunter—and a single thrust in the seams from his vicious snout would be enough to sink a sturdier vessel than a fishing sloop; but a painted keg, although it be carried five miles out to sea in repeated spurts of energy, is in the end the vanquisher, and marks the poor fish's whereabouts when the sloop puts a dory over to bring him in.

How does a horse gallop? Owing to the rapidity of action it cannot be seen by the human eye. However, just as the individual spokes of a rapidly revolving wheel can be made visible by a flash of lightning, so the action of a galloping horse can be and has been analyzed by instantaneous photography.

The statuette of Sysonby, the thoroughbred, has been made from photographs taken at the instant when all four legs are off the ground. The back is arched, the hind feet are directed forward, the fore feet backward, so that both feet are tucked under the animal's body.

When the limbs again touch the ground the first to do so is one of the hind feet, which is thrust forward, so as to form an anchor with the line of the body, and thus serve the purpose of a spring in breaking the force of the impact of the hoof when the horse is going at top speed.

In the conventional mode of representing a galloping horse all four legs are off the ground. The front pair are extended backward in such a way that the under surfaces of their hoofs are directed skyward, the body being at the same time brought near the ground. This conventional pose appears to have been derived from a dog running, when the front and hind legs are respectively extended forward and backward, with the soles of the hind feet turned upward.

This pose, it is thought, was adopted to represent the gallop of the horse by the goldsmiths of Mycenae between 1800 and 1000 B. C., whence it was transmitted by the Persians and Silesians to China and Japan, to return in the eighteenth century, as the result of commercial relations, to western Europe.

Divorce in England. England is about to indulge in the national pastime of America and inquire into her divorce laws, writes Sydney Brooks in Harper's Weekly. The proposed change in the law will confer jurisdiction in divorce cases upon county courts. The present system compels petitioners to journey to London, and even in uncontested cases there is a minimum expenditure of some $300.

There are, roughly speaking, some 80,000 married men and women in England at this moment living a life of enforced celibacy under separation orders, says the writer. There are about 60,000 more who are tied to partners who have been certified as insane. Probably one would not be far wrong in saying that there are 20,000 men and women in England who, if the English laws were less expensive and more liberal, would be as good as dead.

Mysterious Pail of Pennies. An Express Package That Puzzled an Iowa Merchant.

A pail of conscience money passed through here a few days ago en route from Dysart to a merchant at Buffalo Centre. The pail was sent by express, collect, the charges being 55 cents. The consignee was Charles Leisbohn, who has been engaged in the mercantile business at several points in Iowa and is at a loss to know who sent him the "easy money."

On opening the pail Mr. Leisbohn found two sacks filled with pennies and on counting them found 2,740. The pail was accompanied by a note saying "You are my friend, you have this coming. Your friend, nothing else." The pail containing the mysterious shipment was a small-sized candy pail that originally came from a biscuit company of Sioux City and was shipped to E. Nye at Lake Park, Ia. The sacks were the usual bank sacks, one bearing the name of a Cedar Rapids institution. The pennies weighed 19 pounds.

Mr. Leisbohn is at a loss to locate the sender of this "loose change," but thinks it is some conscience money or the settlement of some old account that he has some time charged off to profit and loss and never expected to get.—Iowa Falls correspondent of the Des Moines Register and Leader.
