SUICIDE OF A WEALTHY LORD.

London Cor. of N. Y. Times. sudden and terrible death of Lord Dalreith created a great sensation in Scotland and among the friends and numerous tenants and retainers of the house of Buccleuch. The decease of the heir of the house of Westdecease or the neir of the house of West-minster in 1884, was neither so unexpected nor so generally deplored, for Lord Gros-venor was a dissipated young man, who bade likely to reflect no credit on his order and who really killed himself with drink. But very tolerable head for the most expensive aristocratic establishment in Europe. It is said that no other family in the world, for that matter, spends as much money annually as do the Buccleuchs. The Duke has 10 great halle, castles, or hunting lodges scattered through England and Scotland, besides Montagu House in Whitehall here in town. All these places are kept up the whole year round, with full staffs of servants, horses, &c., with larders supplied, furniture uncovered, fires burning—in readiness for occupancy at a moment's notice. To this rule no exception is allowed, no matter how far away the Duke may be. He has an income of about $1,200,000 a year upon which to do this, and is said to practically spend it all. The vast estates come only in part from the unhappy Monmouth, who, as all known, was the first Duke of Buccleuch. He married the heiress of the Scot s, and she brought him much wealth and land, only a portion of which was lost in the subsequent attainder. But his grandson, the second duke, married the heiress of the Queensberrys, and their son in turn wedded the heiress of the greater Montagus. Thus the blood of three famous ducal houses of older England, as well as the handsome young heir who shot himself to death the other day.

Some Queer People in Vermont. From the New York Tribune

Chatting about country speculations Mr. Heath said: "It is astonishing how many appeared, the trees have complying the great marble quarries. There are a score of men worth half a million each and the men worth a quarter of a million are as thick as bees in clover. Vermont is a staid and moral old state. Yet I have known of rich men of Rutland dropping $90,000 in a single deal in Wall street without even so much as a whimper. What would you think of a town of that size and in that amosphere of morality where you might see a poker game played out of which one man came the loser of $1100?

You do not see many such games as that in the city of New York. They have prohibition up there, which makes every drug store a liquor saloon. If a man is arrested for drunk enness and is fined and ordered to the work house, he can escape by disclosing the name of the person who sold him the liquor. Disclosure is followed by fining the seller. The prosecutions are all in the hands of what is known as a state's attorney. When he walks into a drug store and asks for $50 to $100 he gets it every time. The druggist knows that it is cheaper than to stand a scries of prosecutions. There is a case on record in Vermont where a woman had sold liquor for a long number of years to a man who finally got mad at her. He kept a daily record of the drinks she had sold him. Every drink was a new offence. He went into the court and disclosed, as they call it, and swore to all the sales on his menorandum. She was sentenced for terms of imprisonment which, in the aggregata, amounted to ninetynine years. I believe she was pardoned after which, in the aggregata, amounted to ninetynine years. I believe she was pardoned after she had served some time."

sold here can be bought for about the same in the United States, and New York city, one of the New Hebrides Islands. Ap with the exception of a very few articles, such as clothes and gloves, sells as cheap as dignation, advised that a gunboat lying Paris or London. I think the American in the harbor be sent to draw a cordon goods as a rule are fully as good, and except around the island, drive all the natives goods as a rule are fully as good, and except in the cases of articles upon which a very high duty is charged, they give n.ore for the money. Clothes for men are cheaper in London than in New York, but the English tailor cannot compare with his American brother. He gives you good stuff and a moderately good fit, but his cut lacks the finish and the style of the tailor of Broadway. The men of America are the best dressed men in the world, and our American girls know better how to wear their clothes than any other women in the world. A walk in the afternoon in the shopping parts of New York will show you more elegantly-dressed women than a whole Sunday in the Champs Elysees or Hyde Park, and some of our servant girls on three dollars a week cut a better figure on three dollars a week cut a better figure on the proposed cordon they would probably have made a bad mess of it.

A School Boy Who Was Nearly Hanged. In the autobiography of the late S. Irenseus Prime, now being published in the New York Prime, now being published in the New York Observer, the writer tells of a scholar who went to school to him in Sing Sing, and was rather stupid at first as he blundered over his rather stupid at first as he blundered over his A B C's. One day Mr. Prime stood the small boy in the middle of the room as a punishment. The bell rope hung just there, and the teacher in fun dropped the noose over the lad's head. There happened to be some boys in the hall above who pulled the rope, and the little fellow at once went toward the ceiling. The teacher grabbed the rope and pulled, which made the boys pull all the harder, and the child was in danger of being hanged then and there. But Mr. Prime succeeded in extricating him none the worse for the hanging, and afterwards wrote: "He went on with his studies, became a capital speaker at public meetings, studied law, became recorder of the city of New York, and subsequently governor of the state of New York, ny life-long friend, John T. Hoffman."

Liberty's Terch.

Liberty's Torch.

From the New York Sun. The torch of the statue of Liberty will con tain five electric lamps of 30,000 candle power the light of which will be thrown heavenward It is believed that the light will so illuminate passing clouds that they will be visible at a distance of 100 miles. Four electric lights of 6,000 candle power each will be paced at the foot of the statue, so as to illuminate it. The diadem on the head of the figure will contain incandescent lamps to give the effect of jewels.

Stories From Savages' Lands.

Somelifit markable stories That White Travellers Have Set Going.

Travellers have told many strange stories about new countries they have visited. A great many wonderful yarus really killed himself with drink. One of the funniest stories that ever gained wide circulation was that about the hone-eating trees of the Louisiade persons there are throughout the country who are taking flyers in the markets in New York. For instance I have been been to the ground and that the leaves been the ground and that the ground and ground and the ground and York. For instance, I have been spending a month in Rutland, Vermont. It's a place of about all bits of bone or flesh that they 16,000 inhabitants. It has more wealth, I believe, than any other place of its size in the traces of the bones and meat entirely discompletely country. There are six or eight millionaires in the town, who made their money mostly in the great marble quarries. There are a score ped them as deities, and placed offerings
