A COURT CHANGE.

An observer of such matters draws attention to the fact that Princess Henry of Battenberg was described in the "Court Circular" last Saturday as "Princess Beatrice" a reversion to her former title.

GENERAL COLLARD OF THE L.V.T.

General A. S. Collard, whose appointment in the reorganization of the Admiralty is announced, was one of the many valuable soldiers, including Lord Kitchener, who were on leave in England at the outbreak of the war and at once took their part in its prosecution. He was then in charge of pioneer railway work in Nigeria. He joined the Railway Transport Service here, and was afterwards appointed a staff officer in the Director of Movements branch in the War Office. Later he took control of inland water transport work, and was made Director of Inland Waterways and Docks. This new department provided men and material for the maintenance and repair of waterways in the British sphere of operations. Its energies have been particularly notable in the Mesopotamia Expedition since last July, when the India Office ceased to have the conduct of these operations. The tonnage of supplies carried upriver has increased nine months by something like 2,000 per cent.

DRINK RATIONING.

Beer rationing has set in in earnest in the south of England, particularly in the country villages near the big camps. The innkeepers are now only receiving a proportion of their former supply and are being severely passed to having himself received last year a dividend of 47 per cent. after payment of excess profits duty on a few hundred pounds he had invested in ships when he was in business in Glasgow.

LEADERS AT THE BAR.

When eminent counsel with large practices at the Bar enter the Government they leave behind them a heritage of work to be divided among their learned friends in the Court. Recently the heritage has been rich, and it has in large part fallen to a small and select group of King's Counsel. Government changes in the last year or two have withdrawn from active practice in the Courts such distinguished lawyers as the present Lord Chancellor, Sir Edward Carson, and Mr. Duke. Sir F. E. Smith and Sir Gordon Hewart, as Law Officers of the Crown, have also left very valuable private practices. Even although the war is bringing about a restriction in the amount of litigation, there is still a great demand for advocates of the first rank. Some of them, like Sir John Simon, have recently been extremely busy. The number of such men is restricted, and no doubt in current talk the amount of their earnings is liable to exaggeration. But it would appear that with fewer men to share the work it is extremely handsome. Visions of wealth and distinction appear before the eyes of the young aspirant to a career at the Bar when he hears stories of successful lawyers earning their thousand guineas a week on occasion, and sometimes even more. The prizes no doubt are great, but few obtain them.

ENGLAND'S MOST ORIGINAL PARSON.

"The most original clergyman in England," is a description once applied with considerable justification to Forbes Phillips, the parson-playwright, who died on May 29th. Known in many literary circles as Athol Forbes, Mr. Phillips probably got his passion for the stage from his brother, the poet, Stephen Phillips. He was so badly stage-struck that he launched a scheme to provide every parish with its theatre, to be run, if possible, in double harness with the church. To lead the way, he produced in his own parish of Gorleston (a seaside resort on the East coast) plays, pantomimes, and pageants, also by inviting players like Mrs. Brown Potter to recite in his church. In his religious efforts Mr. Phillips was equally unconventional. He once publicly thrashed a Wycliff preacher. He helped to build a chapel for a Baptist minister, and actively supported the Salvation Army. He wrote several not quite successful plays, and acted a part in a play on the London stage. Withal he was a loyal Anglican, and as a preacher often filled his church to overflowing. His actress-daughter, Miss Forbes Phillips, lately married Flight-Lieut. Egbert Cadbury, one of the Bourneville cocoa family.

SHIPOWNERS' PROFITS.

Among the many Budget points discussed on the second reading of the Finance Bill, the case of the shipowners received a good deal of attention. Perhaps more would have been said about their special treatment had not a member satirised their spokesmen by suggesting that a flag day should be arranged on behalf of "hippocunious shipowners." Bonar Law made the remarkable statement that as a rule shipowners during the last three years made an equivalent of 33 1/3 per cent. per annum upon their capital after paying excess profits duty. During the two years before the war the average rate of profit earned by ships was about 15 per cent. If, therefore, the Government had allowed shipowners to be covered by previous payments of excess profits duty in respect of any future deficit due to requisition rates, the result would have been to guarantee them something like 15 per cent. The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Bonar Law) laid great stress upon the good time that shipowners had enjoyed as a direct result of the war. He con-

FORTY-ONE TO FIFTY.

Posters inviting men between 41 and 50 to join the Army have been issued by the War Office. It remains to be seen what response will be given to the invitation; but the recruiting authorities expect that in some districts at least a considerable number of men who have been training in the Volunteers will take the opportunity of passing into the Army. The fact that the medical examination precedes attestation for these older men may well prove to be an attractive feature of the new scheme. On the other hand, the withholding of the right of appeal to tribunals will check the inclination of men to come forward when they have a lingering doubt whether their civil liabilities are compatible with military service. Men who are accepted at least before being called up, and probably this period may in practice be extended to a month. When the posters have been scattered broadcast, and the invitation circulated throughout the length and breadth of the land, it will be seen what reserves of fit men the scheme will produce. Anyone who travels by tram or train here will soon become aware from conversation that it is causing the closest public interest. I have observed that discussions which have quite a friendly bearing on the voluntary character of the scheme have frequently a marked tendency to terminate in reflections upon a class of young men who are described as "Cuthberts." To explain to foreign readers the meaning of this cryptic name I have to say that it refers to the young fit Britisher of military age who has so far been able to escape military service, very largely for the poor reason that he is employed in a Government office. The famous caricaturist Poy of the London "Evening News" always portrays "Cuthbert" as a rabbit peeping apprehensively out of his little hole.

The Control of Food.

Washington Post: The country is confronted with the alternative of submitting to private control of food, by conspirators, with the risk of crippling the Allies and thus losing the war, or asserting control of all food by the government. Talk of "paternalism" and "centralization" and "government usurpation" become idle when the dire alternative is thoroughly understood. The government must act for all the people in the food question, just as it acts for the people in military and naval operations. Bread and bullets are weapons of war which must be controlled exclusively by the government.

German Mud-Headedness.

(From the New York Evening Post.) A compilation of German opinion on the prospects of victory shows that England is the bulwark that cannot be shaken off after it has closed its jaws, but that nevertheless it will be shaken off in two months (Herr von Heydebrand) or in about another year (Kölnische Zeitung) or nobody knows when, and it is foolish to prophesy (Count von Reventlow). It would also appear that "several weeks ago it was supposed that when certain things had happened on sea and on land the war would have ended." (Reventlow). But since these things have not come to pass, since the U-boats have not triumphed on sea and Russia has not made a separate peace on land, the war has become more serious (Reventlow) and therefore Germany must insist on a heavy indemnity (Herr von Rheinboldt, Finance Minister of Baden).

Now it might be possible to take the press and public men of any other belligerent country and discover a similar label of opinion and out of logic, but for Germany this is the unity of confidence and perfection of reason upon which she based her challenge to America. The German people has been asked to stake its all, in Bethmann-Hollweg's phrase, on a "sure thing," which has resulted as betting of that kind usually does. The marvellous argumentative resources of the German mind which were mobilized to prove, first, that America would not come in, and Russia would step out, and, second, that England would be beaten before America could come in or Russia decided not to step out, is now being concentrated to prove that England will be beaten after America comes in and Russia has decided to stick.
