

Vapo-Resolene
 A Vapor Treatment for Coughs and Colds
 The time for Vapo-Resolene is at the first indication of a cold or sore throat. It is simple to use, you just light the little lamp that vaporizes the Cresolene and place it near the bed. The soothing anesthetic vapor makes breathing easy, relieves the cough, eases the congestion and protects the mucous membrane. Recommended for Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Croup, Laryngitis, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, etc. The benefit is unquestionable. Send for descriptive booklet. Sole and exclusive VAPOR-RESOLENE CO., Limited, 1111 St. John's St., Montreal.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Two men, standing not very far from each other in a corner of the court, felt as if the verdict had been already pronounced; and both their faces flushed with the anticipation of vindictive satisfaction.

Both Marston and Morgan Thorpe were thirsting for that one word "Guilty!" and as they glanced at the grave face of the foreman of the jury they could almost fancy that the word, the fatal word, was already forming on his lips.

Gaunt himself was convinced that there was no hope.

As the attorney-general began his reply to the defense Gaunt drew himself up and gripped the edge of the dock firmly.

If Lady Pauline would only take Decima away!

As if she had heard his unuttered prayer, Lady Pauline at that moment said in a low voice:

"Come away now, Decima."

But Decima shook her head, and her hands strained together still more closely in her lap.

"What was it the attorney-general was saying, 'knocking,' as one of the burglars whispered—'knocking with every word a fresh nail in the prisoner's coffin?'"

The evidence against the prisoner is overwhelming. The unhappy woman was stabbed in his rooms. She was found covered by his coat. The weapon with which the deed was done was his. No one else, no other man, entered that awful room that night."

At this point of his terrible eloquence he had paused; for there had come from the back of the court a hoarse and derisive laugh.

The attorney-general repeated the last words.

"No other man entered that room that night."

The laugh was repeated also.

The attorney-general stopped and looked round indignantly; the usher cried "Silence." The judge looked up sternly from his notes; some of the ladies laughed hysterically. There was a confusion at the back of the court, from which the strange sound had proceeded. A man's voice, thin and broken, yet penetrating, came across the crowded room as if he were addressing the judge.

The judge held up his hand.

"Silence," he commanded. Then, as the silence fell, he said: "What is the meaning of this disturbance? Bring that disorderly person forward!"

A policeman, drawing a man with him, pushed his way through the crowd. The man was pale and emaciated, and the effect of his pallor was increased by his red hair and bloodshot eyes.

"Trevor!" exclaimed Thorpe under his breath.

"Jackson!" thought Gaunt. "Has he gone mad? What will they do with the poor devil?"

But if Jackson were mad, he concealed his insanity with admirable art. Of all present, he was the most calm, saying perhaps the judge and the prisoner.

"Why have you made this disturbance?" asked the judge.

Trevor looked up at the bench and then round the court.

"I laughed," he said—his tone was respectful enough, but it was suggestive of a kind of sullen contempt—he was breathing painfully, and his head was thrust forward as if he were too weak to stand upright—"I laughed at the attorney-general's speech," he continued. "He said no other man besides Lord Gaunt went into the room that night; and I happen to know that one did."

Sir James rose quickly and turned to Mr. Belford.

"Who is it?" he demanded.

Mr. Belford shook his head.

"I can not tell you," he replied, with agitation.

The judge held up his hand to still the murmur which had arisen.

"Do you offer yourself as a witness?" he asked.

Trevor nodded and coughed. He was going into the witness-box amidst intense excitement.

The attorney-general rose.

"My lord, I need scarcely say that I am quite ignorant—that I know nothing of this person or the evidence which he is about to give."

Sir James rose.

"My lord," he began, in anything but his usually self-possessed manner, "I am as ignorant of this person and his evidence as my learned friend; but my client, the prisoner at the bar, is desirous that the truth, and all the truth shall be told respecting this terrible tragedy."

There was a murmur of applause which was instantly suppressed.

"I myself will examine the witness," he said. "But perhaps it will be still better that we should permit him to make his statement."

The two eminent counsels bowed in concurrence.

Trevor leaned against the witness-box, his eyes fixed on the royal arms just above the judge's head. His face wore an expression of sullen, almost stolid resignation. As he had entered the box, he had glanced at Gaunt, but had glanced only, and had not looked toward the dock since; indeed, he seemed indifferent to everything—the crowded court, the excited faces, the majesty of the law, represented by the stern-faced judge, utterly indifferent to everything around him.

"You say," said the judge, "that a man, other than the prisoner, entered his rooms at Prince's Mansions the night of the murder. Tell us what you know of the case; and remember that you are upon your oath."

Trevor leaned over the edge of the box.

"I say that a man entered Lord Gaunt's rooms that night. He called at the house in Cardigan Terrace and inquired for Mrs. Dalton." A fit of coughing checked him for a time; when he had recovered from it he resumed, with difficulty, and still more hoarsely. "The man was told that Mrs. Dalton was confined to her room with a headache. He was turning the corner of the street, when he saw her leave the house and get into a cab. He wanted to know where she was going; he called another cab and followed her—"

The attorney-general rose. He was going to say that this was not evidence, but the judge held up his hand, and Mr. Attorney-General resumed his seat.

Trevor had not glanced at him, but waited stolidly until the judge signed to him to go on.

How to Make Pine Cough Syrup at Home

You know that pine is used in nearly all prescriptions and remedies for coughs. The reason is that pine contains several peculiar elements that have a remarkable effect in soothing and healing the membranes of the throat and chest. Pine is famous for this purpose.

Pine cough syrups are combinations of pine and syrup. The "syrup" part is usually plain sugar syrup.

To make the best pine cough remedy that money can buy, put 2½ ounces of Pinex in a 16-oz. bottle, and fill up with home-made sugar syrup. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you make 16 ounces—more than you can buy ready-made for $2.50. It is pure, good and very pleasant—children take it eagerly.

You can feel this take hold of a cough or cold in a way that means business. The cough may be dry, hoarse and tight, or may be persistently loose from the formation of phlegm. The cause is the same—infamed membranes—and this Pinex and Syrup combination will stop it—usually in 24 hours or less. Splendid, too, for bronchial asthma, hoarseness, or any ordinary throat ailment.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and is famous the world over for its prompt effect upon coughs.

Beware of substitutes. Ask your druggist for 2½ ounces of Pinex with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

World's Smallest Screws

The smallest screws in the world—those turned out in a watch factory—are cut from steel wire by a machine, but as the chips fall from the knife it looks as if the operator were simply cutting up the wire to amuse himself! No screws can be seen, and yet a screw is made every third operation.

The fourth jewel wheel screw is next to invisible, and to the naked eye it resembles dust. With a glass, however, it is seen to be a small screw, with 260 threads to an inch, and with a very fine glass the threads may be seen clearly. These tiny screws are four one-thousandths of an inch in diameter, and the heads are double that in size. It is estimated that an ordinary thimble would hold 100,000 of them. About 1 million are made in a month, but no attempt is ever made to count them. In determining the number one hundred of them are placed on a very delicate balance and the number of the whole amount is calculated from the weight of this. The screws are then hardened and put into frames, about one hundred to the frame, heads up. This is done very rapidly, but entirely by the sense of touch instead of by sight, so that a blind man could do it as well as the owner of the sharpest eye. The heads are then polished in an automatic machine, ten thousand at a time.
