Had Doctor Map and Mrt Carrick been promise of five hundred pounds was so strong a temptation to fraud that the plot cessfully carried out, and a suppositions

The usual accompaniments of carts, horses and donkeys, were disposed around the moking tents. Some dirry, half-naked children of both sexes rolled about upon the grass in noisy glee, and one or two full-grown gipsies could be seen lazily stretched upon the ground.

As Lynedoch emerged from the hill-path on the other side of the stream, two or three yelping curs bounded towards his horse's heels, and the outery brought the general attention upon him. The children ceased their sports to gaze upon the stranger, the mea and women lying by the side of the tents rose to their chows to look upon him, and a bright-eyed girl, of pretty features, waded through the stream, and smillingly asked if she would tell his fortune?

'Nay, my pretty lass,' answered Lynedoch. My errand hither is to have a word with Mark Gideon. Is he at hand?

The girl nodded, and turning promptly away, re-crossed the brook, and entered a tent placed at some distance from the rest. It was a tent which, in appearance as well as position, made some pretentions to superiority. Its canvas was whiter, a scarlet fringe ran around its eaves, and a dingy, embroidered curtain hung over the entrance, in a minute or less-this curtain was lifted.

In a minute or less this curtain was lifted from within, and Mark Gideon stepped out, his high-erowned, sugar-loaf hat thrown juntily on one side of his head, and a short black pipe stuck in his mouth. On seeing who it was that wanted him he withdrew the latter from between his lips, knocked out the ashes against a stone, and thrust the pipe into the pocket of his velveteen vest.

Crossing the stream by stepping-stones which had been placed in its channel, and kicking with his hob-nailed shoes the yelping dogs, he approached lynedoch with a somewhat sulleu expression on his face.

'I'm told you want me, Master Lynedoch,' he observed, in a curt and not over-respectful one.

ful tone.

'Yes, I want to speak with you, Mark; and as what I have to say is not for every one to listen to, let us withdraw out of earshot and observation.

The gipsy silently assented, and Lynedoch dismounting, and placing the bridle within his arm, the pair went slowly round the shoulder of a height, to a place where no eaves dropper could possibly listen to their conversation.
